CURRENCY CRISIS TALKS

Times News Services

LONDON—The Bank of England's new governor, Gordon Richardson, today flew to Switzerland for crisis talks on the ailing pound and dollar with other central bank governors from the major Western nations.

"Although I don't think anything concrete will come from the meeting, I think urgent proposals of some kind will be announced," a chief dealer for buillion brokers Samuel Montagu said.

Among other rumors circulating today was that an emergency summit meeting of world finance ministers could come within the next few days.

The treasury and the Bank of England were being cagey today about what line Richardson will take at the talks, despite rampant rumors in London, including one that the foreign exchange market here will be closed on Monday.

Meanwhile, the New Zealand dollar will be revalued upward by three per cent Monday and its links with the United States dollar will be severed, Finance Minister Wallace Rowling said today in Wellington.

The move came after the U.S. dollar plunged to an all-time low Friday, throwing European foreign exchanges into chaos.

The pound sterling slumped along with the dollar and there were rumors that both currencies might be devalued.

Nine Pickets Close a Town

CASSIAR (CP)—Cassiar Asbestos Corporation suspended all operations here at midnight Friday night and put 500 employees out of work following a strike by nine clerks at the company's retail store.

The clerks, members of the Retail Clerks' Union Local 1518, have put up picket lines about a mile out of town on the only access road to this isolated community of 1,200, about 100 miles south of the Yukon border.

The have cut off all truck traffic into town since Wednesday.

A. C. Caron, Cassiar superintendent, said truck drivers have refused to cross their picket line and the company is running out of fuel.

"Under these conditions we had no other choice but to close down all mining operations to preserve fuel for our residential needs and amenities," he said.

Caron said the company had no work for their 500 employees.

However, he said the company lawyers are investigating the legality of the picket line a mile away from the store and may apply for an injunction.

Retail Clerks president Rudy Krickan said in Vancouver about 14 union members are involved in the bid for a first contract. He said the dispute is over the company's refusal to continue giving the employees the four weeks vacation annually they had before being organized.

J. J. Forbes, president of United Steelworkers Local 6536, representing the miners, declined to comment on the dispute.

20 Face Drug Charges

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — New charges were laid Friday in provincial court here against 20 persons arrested a week ago in connection with an alleged attempt to import 1,000 pounds of hashish and marijuana into Canada.

The new charges followed the discovery Wednesday of 24 plastic bags containing about 800 pounds of hashish and 200 pounds of marijuana under a log on the beach of Quatsino Sound, five miles south of Winter Harbor on northwestern Vancouver Island.

Thirteen Americans, arrested on the converted U.S. minesweeper Marysville, were flown from Victoria to North Vancouver to face a charge of conspiracy to possess narcotics for the purpose of trafficking.

Five Canadians and two Americans arrested on the Canadian fishboat Gondola were also charged with the same offence. They also face a charge of conspiracy to import narcotics into Canada, laid in North Vancouver earlier in the week.

In addition, three members of the group of Americans were charged Friday with conspiracy to import narcotics into Canada.

Charged with conspiracy to possess narcotics for the purpose of trafficking are: Alexander Derenzy, 38, owner of the Marysville, San Rafael, Calif.; Carol Anne Maniscalo, 20, San Rafael; Diane Maniscalo, 17, San Francisco; Joellen Bal, 20, Napili, Maui, Hawaii;

Sandra Ann May, 23, Mill Valley, Calif.; Shelley Stevens, 19, San Rafael; Regina Saesi, 20, Daly City, Calif.; George S. McDonald, 49, San Rafael; Glen Elton Davis, 26, Maui, Hawaii;

Japan: The Agony of Affluence

A maddening crush of commuters forces its way onto the Tokyo subway. This is the first of a six-part look at the Land of the Rising Sun by Times columnist Jack Scott.

They'd said it was the rainy season and they'd said to bring an umbrella, too, when they'd invited me to spend two weeks in this fevered, driven, prospering country. They were right on both counts.

Even for Tokyo, the greatest, most densely-populated, most hysterical city in the world, the Seibu department store is quite literally mad.

This is the time of O-chugen when, it seems, you buy a gift, usually imported, for everyone who's done you a favor in the past year or who may likely do you a favor in the year ahead. The bulk of the buying, traditionally, is in canned goods, imported booze (Johnnie Walker scotch is about $35 a bottle), soap, perfume or a necktie. There are more exotic presents if the obligation is considered a major one. Another department store, for example, offers a gift coupon worth about $90 which gives the recipient a free overnight visit and complete physical check-up in the private hospital of his choice.

It's best not to try to understand the Japanese, I am finding, but just to accept things the way they are because that's the way they are.

My young guide, Teiji Sukurai, valiantly leads the way through a wall of human flesh to the umbrella department. Teiji looks exactly like those war-time cartoons of the Japanese, all toothy grin and opaque, horn-rimmed spectacles, but each hour I am with him gives me a new appreciation of his intelligence and sensitivity. Only our humor is on differing wave lengths. Can I really be all that amusing?

The umbrella bought, Teiji tells me that the Seibu has a brand-new item that he's sure will interest me. We claw our way to the groaning escalators to the fifth floor.

The new item is a large sack made of white canvas called simply The Emergency Bag. It's most obvious use would be in case of another earthquake, predicted all but daily by the scientists who say that there's just no way that Tokyo can avoid a tremor of the dimensions that took 100,000 lives and left a million-and-a-half homeless in 1923.

It scared the hell out of one visitor, I don't mind admitting, but Tokyo went on without interrupting its frenzied pace last week when it trembled from a quake measuring five points on the Japanese scale of seven, the heaviest of the year, that hit the northern island of Hokkaido and caused a series of "minor tidal waves."

The current best-selling novel, by the way, now in its 74th printing and heading for the local sales record of "The Godfather," is a science fiction work by Sakyo Komatsu and is all about Japan sinking into the sea in the late 70s with two-and-a-half million drownings. They can't keep the book on the shelves.

The Emergency Bag contains about everything you'd want for such an eventuality. Flashlight. Map of Tokyo. Bag of sour-ball hard candy. Raincoat that folds into an envelope. Plastic water jug. Tablets for settling stomach disorders. Fill-in card for name, address, blood type, location of nearest possible shelter. Medicine kit with iodine, gauze, bandages, adhesive tape, scissors, a surgical probe.

As we fight our way down to the subway beneath the store — most Tokyo department stores are over the underground railway stations and many, in fact, are owned by the private companies that operate the lines — Teiji draws me to a window that looks on the street intersection below.

The sullen, sooty rain is still coming down. You could walk across the crush of pedestrians and cars, as you could at almost any Tokyo intersection. Above this surge of humanity and automobiles there is a flashing electric sign that alternately registers the minute-by-minute sound decibels and the air pollution. They are at major intersections throughout the monstrous city.

"It is to show when conditions are good or bad," Teiji explains. "They are always bad."

I don't understand the flashing figures.

"That is the sound pollution," Teiji explains. "Today it is appalling."

The lights change with a new figure.

"That is the photochemical, sulphuric acid and the carbon monoxide pollution," explains Teiji. "Today it is intolerable."

Now, after two weeks in Japan, I look back on that wet, comically chaotic morning when I bought the umbrella as perhaps the ideal, symbolic introduction to this remarkable nation, these 110 million people crowded into four small islands with about the same land area as Newfoundland.

In the decade ahead, perhaps sooner, this will be the richest single nation on the face of the earth. Yet today it's a nation in which appre-

Feed Action Pledge

Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Alastair Gillespie, Friday Voiced "real concern" in the Commons over the United States' government imposing export controls on a wide range of agricultural products.

"We have this matter under urgent, urgent review at the present time," Gillespie said.

"We will take the action the circumstances demand," he said.

Canadian farmers and consumers are bound to suffer from the impact of the latest measures announced by the U.S. administration, MPs warned.

Washington has placed export controls on 41 agricultural products, including edible oils, animal fats and livestock feed, in a move to halt the U.S. food price spiral and prevent shortages. The controls are effective immediately.

H. W. Danforth (PC—Kent-Essex) described the U.S. action as a "drastic but not unexpected move."

He pointed out that Canada is a major customer of the U.S. and this action could have "serious implications" for Canadian producers and consumers.

Troops Hunt Kidnappers

Times News Services

SALISBURY — Rhodesian troops, led by big game hunters and African trackers, today pursued a band of guerrillas who kidnapped 292 students and staff members from a remote Roman Catholic mission school and still hold 40 of them.

"We are worried that as the missing party gets smaller it will be more difficult for those remaining to escape," said Father Egon Rojek, head of St. Albert's German Jesuit mission in northeastern Rhodesia.

A government spokesman said, however, he doubted that the African guerrillas would be able to reach the Mozambique border in a group with their hostages now that troops, trackers and hunters were in pursuit.

He said one guerrilla died in a skirmish with security forces but no further casualties have been reported.

The guerrillas, numbering 20 to 30, dressed in camouflage uniforms and toting submachine-guns, told German Jesuit priests running the mission that they came to liberate Rhodesia and were taking the children to China for guerrilla training.

The security men, lighting up the night sky with flares, have followed the guerrillas, now believed to have split into two groups, into the Zambesi Valley more than 12 miles from the hill-top mission.

Before leaving the mission, the guerrillas looted a store and took a large quantity of food and clothing which they force the children to carry, presumably to sustain them on the journey.

With the security forces at their heels there will be little time to rest, and added to this is Rhodesia's cruel winter weather — intense heat during the day and bitter cold at night.

Rojek said since the guerrilla raid on the mission 252 students and mission workers have been resuued by security forces or have managed to escape, he said.

He said 36 senior students, a primary school teacher, two kitchen maids and a local girl are still missing.

"Students who have returned say they were not fed by the guerrillas," he said. "Many of the children are weak from hunger after their forced march in the Zambesi Valley."

The Rev. Clement Freyer, a West German priest who voluntarily accompanied the guerrillas to ensure the safety of the hostages, returned today to the mission school. Rojek said Freyers had become separated from the group during one of the skirmishes.

Rescue Plans Snagged

SAIGON (CP) — A snag developed today in plans to bring about the rescue of two Canadians in Viet Cong hands for more than a week.

The Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government said in a statement that the first of three stages of a search operation under which the Canadians were expected to be returned no later than Monday had to be called off.

It could not say when flights would resume.

It blamed the South Vietnamese army.

Two helicopters took off earlier today bound for the divisional headquarters of the Viet Cong in the area of Xuan Loc, 35 miles northeast of Saigon, where the men disappeared a week last Thursday.

The helicopters were to make three trips. The first, today, to divisional headquarters, the second Sunday to another area and a third Monday to the Gam Tam area, about 10 miles west of the International Commission of Control and Supervision site from where the men left on a flag-showing trip.

But the PRG issued a statement tonight saying that the helicopters could not enter Viet Cong territory because of South Vietnamese operations "at the points scheduled for helicopters to land in order that PRG delegation officers could contact with local authorities in PRG-controlled territory."

PUC Commissioners Plan To Sue for Compensation

Two members of the B.C. Public Utilities Commission plan to sue the provincial government to get compensation for their forced retirement.

But first they must get a royal fiat — permission from the government to sue the government.

Lyle Wicks and Findlay S. McKinnon say the government has broken their 10-year contracts without offering them compensation of another job.

Their retirements have been forced by the dissolution of the PUC, which becomes official July 15.

Most functions of the PUC have been assumed by the new B.C. Energy Commission, created by legislation introduced in March by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald.

Neither Wicks nor McKinnon was appointed to the new commission.

"The Crown has made no effort to meet with Mr. Wicks or Mr. McKinnon or with their duly authorized representatives for the purposes of coming to a fair and equitable settlement of their contractual rights," Ian Stewart, lawyer for the two, said today in a prepared statement.

Stewart would not say how much the two will sue for, simply that "they each have seven and a half years to run on their contract."

Both signed 10-year contracts as commissioners in April 1971, with the contracts coming into effect April 15, 1971.

"Mr. Wicks and Mr. McKinnon took up their duties and since then have fully fulfilled and discharged their duties," said Stewart.

This week Stewart sent petitions of right to the provincial secretary asking that the lieutenant-governor (the cabinet, in effect) grant the fiat to allow them to sue.

Under B.C. law, no private citizen can sue the government without getting cabinet consent through a fiat.

Attorney-General Macdonald has said the government plans to abolish the fiat system.

The other member of the commission, Dr. J. F. K. English, who was chairman, is not part of the suit because he has retired, said Stewart.

NIXON SAYS NO

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon told the Senate Watergate committee today he would not appear before it personally "under any circumstances" and would not permit it to see any of his presidential papers.

In a letter to Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Dem.-N.C., Nixon said: "I consider it my constitutional responsibility" to avoid an appearance before the panel or to make available presidential papers requested by the committee.

Referring to requests for documents made to White House counsel Leonard Garment by Ervin, Nixon wrote: "The pending requests ... would move us from proper presidential co-operation with a Senate committee to jeopardizing the fundamental constitutional role of the presidency."

Student Opinions Invited

Education commissioner John Bremer, assigned by Education Minister Eileen Dailly to undertake a comprehensive study of the B.C. school system, has invited students to submit their opinions on how education can be improved in the province.

Bremer, in a press release Friday, said students will be invited to form "study groups" in each of their schools "to conduct inquiries into any aspect of the educational process that they might consider to be of concern and to submit recommendations for change and improvement."

He said there are no specific terms of reference for students to follow. Areas of concentration could be local or province-wide, specific or general. Any work done would be part of the students' regular work load, perhaps incorporated into guidance courses.

Channels already exist for teachers to express their opinions, Bremer said. Student opinion should similarly be expressed "with honesty and candor and without fear."

He said a small budget may be available over normal school costs for the student efforts. If the program proves successful inter-school programs may be encouraged so that study groups can see their problems in perspective to others.

Bremer said the scheme has been approved in principle by the Principals' and Vice-Principals' Association.

COOL, DAMP TO LINGER

Cool, damp weather will persist in Victoria for the rest of the weekend, the Victoria weather office said today.

An on-shore flow of air from the Pacific will continue to bring clouds and showers to the area, and afternoon temperatures of no more than 60 to 65.

Vancouver, Nanaimo, Comox and Sandspit all had record low afternoon temperatures Friday. At the Vancouver airport a maximum temperature of 60 was one degree below the lowest ever registered there on July 6. Nanaimo and Comox reached 59 Friday, Sandspit 55.

The weather office at the Victoria airport had a maximum temperature of 63 Friday, a long way from the record low of 45 set in 1952.

Mill Stays Closed

PORT ALBERNI — A handful of pickets kept the MacMillan Bloedel pulp mill shut down for a second day today while plans were being made for a mass meeting of union members Sunday.

About 1,100 men have been affected by the unauthorized picketers, who first appeared last Thursday night with signs reading: "no contract, no work."

PEEK-A-BOO GIRL DIES

BURLINGTON, VT. (UPI)—Actress Veronica Lake who rose to stardom during the Second World War died today of acute hepatitis at the Medical Centre Hospital of Vermont where she had been hospitalized since June 26. She was 51.

The death was confirmed in New York by a close friend.

Veronica, the cool blonde with the peek-a-boo hair was the pin up girl in dugouts from the Rhine to Guadalcanal before she faded to life as a waitress and factory girl.

In an era when the tough guy flourished on the silver screen, with wide lapels and floppy hats, Veronica played the perfect female foil—the "tough girl" who shrugged off bland men, fell for the "heels," and lighted another cigarette when the breaks went bad.

In the movies, she played the stoic, hard-times girl who was slapped around by life, but couldn't be broken.

She flashed from bit parts to overnight stardom, then vanished into obscurity less than 10 years later, winding up at one point in a factory pasting cloth flowers on lingerie hangers, then becoming a waitress in a New York bar and grill.

Her hair style was her trademark and set a fashion for the 1940s. Silky and naturally blonde, it fell seductively in waves over her right eye.

She married and divorced three husbands an army officer, a director and a music publisher—refusing to accept alimony. "I am perfectly capable of earning my own living," she told one judge.

She had three children. In later years she said she rarely saw them or heard from them.

Fish Shutdown Total—Union

"It's a complete shutdown," union business agent George Hewison said from Vancouver of the strike by about 7,000 fishermen, tendermen and shoreworkers. Also involved are fishermen in the Native Brotherhood of British Columbia.

Hewison said picket lines are up at all canneries represented by the B.C. Fisheries Association and picket boats are patrolling fishing grounds.

In Victoria, Elgin (Scotty) Neish, secretary-treasurer for the fishermen's local of the union, said pickets are at the B.C. Packers plant at Ogden Point and the last shift will finish work there at noon today.

The local non-union fish plants, Oakland Industries, Dennis Shellfish and Coast Shellfish, have undertaken not to handle "Hot" fish, Neish said.

A truckload of fish coming in from Tofino Sunday will be the last handled by Oakland, he added.

In Vancouver, Hewison said about 25 packer boats are still at sea but due in by Sunday morning and their loads will still be processed by union workers.

The 2,500 shoreworkers have voted 92 per cent for rejection of the industry's last offer that would have given women a $1.54 hourly pay increase over two years and men $1.10.

The fishermen are seeking 52 cents a pound this year and 57 cents next year for sockeye salmon. The fisheries association has offered 48 cents this year and 50 cents next. Fishermen now are getting 42 cents a pound for sockeye salmon.

Tendermen, earning between $583 and $784 a month under the old contract, are asking for a $160 a month increase the first year and a $120 a month increase the second year. They are also asking for greater seasonal earnings to compensate for overtime.

Shoreworkers are seeking a $2 an hour increase over two years and equal pay for women.

The union says one of the main issues is bargaining a price for salmon roe from the companies. Over the past two years a lucrative market for roe has blossomed, mainly in Japan and the fishermen want a slice of the profit.

The companies are arguing the new prices they are offering provide for this.

Neish explained that trollermen traditionally dress their fish before selling them and can therefore sell their roe for the premium prices it is fetching.

But net fishermen traditionally have delivered their fish "in the round" and the fish companies are arguing they are not equipped to accept fish from them stripped of their roe.

This means, for example, fishermen sell humpback to the packers for 19 cents a pound while the company gets $2.50 a pound for the roe in them, said Neish.

Prices for salmon soared as the last fish came in at the noon deadline Friday and Neish said this is a ploy by the companies to keep troll fishermen outside the union fishing.

Members of the Pacific Troller Association were meeting today to decide how they will respond to Friday's strike by the UFAWU.

THE INSIDE DOPE ON A DIRTY RAT

Police in this northern Detroit suburb learned the culprit stealing leaves from confiscated marijuana plants was a real rat this week when it left footprints on a desk top. It had walked across a fingerprint pad on its way to a marijuana plant being saved as evidence in a trial.

DANGER ZONE REACHED

WELLINGTON (Reuter) — The New Zealand frigate Otago steamed into France's nuclear testing zone in the South Pacific today with battle pennants flying and shadowed by a French reconnaissance aircraft.

The 2,400-ton frigate entered the 120-mile danger zone around Mururoa Atoll early today but is under strict instructions not to penetrate the 12-mile territorial limit around the atoll itself.

It was reported that the large battle ensigns — traditionally signalling a ship going into battle were hoisted to facilitate identification of the Otago.

When New Zealand Prime Minister Norman Kirk ordered the Otago to sail to Mururoa, he stressed that the voyage was to be one of silent protest at France's planned nuclear tests and that confrontation with France would not be sought.

The Otago is armed but the ship's captain, Cmdr. Alan Tyrell, has ordered that no weapons are to be moved without his personal permission while the frigate remains in the French danger zone.

Travels With Your Camera

The best rule of thumb—Keep it simple. Travel light. Don't go equipment-mad. Start slowly and learn each new tool thoroughly. Whatever you do, don't buy a new camera or lens right before going on a trip. Get to know each piece of equipment, the combination of lenses and camera bodies you'll be travelling with, enough ahead of time, that your picture-taking will be spontaneous and fun.

Don't pack your camera and lens in a suitcase, as they might get damaged. Put all your camera equipment in a gadget bag and carry it with you at all times to be ready to capture the unexpected picture.

Tokyo: Worse Than Los Angeles

hension and anxiety are as evident as the umbrellas.

Certainly I won't soon forget that 225-mile ride on the Shinkansen, Japan National Railways' famous blue-and-white "bullet train" from Tokyo, the modern capital, to Kyoto, the ancient capital, gliding effortlessly on seamless rails at up to 125 miles an hour; a train so modern that the inter-connecting doors of the air-conditioned carriages open without the touch of a human hand and there are phones in the buffet for the businessman. It's a ride that's going to be even smoother when the line begins recycling old, discarded automobile tires to make rubber mats for its roadbed.

Pall of Smog

The sun above is burnt orange, but this is no Japanese water-color. It is a pall of nauseous, acrid smog, worse than any Los Angeles has known, all the way.

The people of this land, an esthetic people, are wondering if that is too high a price to pay for the runaway industrialization and the affluence it has brought, yet the Japanese Economic Planning Agency, reporting on new plant and equipment investment for the first six months of this year reports a staggering $14.25 billion, highest ever.

Almost everywhere I was to go — in Tokyo, Kyoto, Osaka, Hiroshima and into the countryside — I witnessed an ecological disaster. The celebrated cherry trees and the chestnuts are dying and there are those who say it is slowly killing the people as well. Two women cannery workers at Shin-Nanyo City, I see by the papers today, are the latest victims of the nerve-paralyzing effects of widespread mercury poisoning from industrial wastes in the Inland Sea and the wholesalers are putting in new rules for the sale of contaminated fish from what once were the clean blue waters surrounding these islands.

Image Worries Them

They could laugh once when General de Gaulle, from his lofty height, categorized them as "a nation of radio salesmen." Salesmen they might be, but they knew that none has been so successful, so indefatigable in the world marketplace. Radios they make, too, the first people to perfect the low-cost transistor. But they knew, too, that they made good radios, not to mention huge ships and small cars, television sets, tape-recorders, stereos, air conditioners and 10,000 other sophisticated products of a quality and at a price no competing nation beats. That explains why, in the last 15 years alone, their exports have increased 600 per cent — this from a nation without iron or oil or coal or, indeed, any natural resources but an incredible inventiveness and a tireless, disciplined energy.

But now, with what is surely an embarrassment of riches, they worry that this dynamism is causing the rest of the world, once all but united in suspicion of "the ugly Americans" to close ranks against "the ugly Japanese."

The visitor finds government and business leaders agonizing openly over the new look in their international image, the need to keep old friends and make new ones if the affluence is to continue and grow — "to keep on good terms with everyone," as a trade ministry spokesman succinctly put it to me.

The massive exports will continue. If you fly over Ujina, the port of Hiroshima, for example, you'll see endless concrete platforms, like shelves, with row after mile-long row of multi-colored Mazda rotary engine cars waiting to be loaded on the freighters waiting in the roads. They are some of the 370,000 Mazdas, only one of the 11 automobile giants, that will be exported this year.

Cooling Guidelines

But now there are "guidelines" to cool it, to slow down, to be, on the surface at least, less aggressive in the thrust for new markets.

The Japanese will continue to need Canadian copper, iron ore, coal and pulp wood from British Columbia, from Australia and the Philippines, bauxite from down under and the rest of the raw materials from abroad that feed this insatiable machine.

But now they are using their tremendous, $20 billion reserve of foreign exchange to form partnerships with their global suppliers, always with the disarming emphasis on "a mutual benefit." Thus the latest "guideline" for investment in Canada takes pains to specify a re-investment of profits, sales of company stock within Canada, local management and, inevitably, safeguards against pollution.

More significantly the Japanese seem genuine in their efforts, at last, to open the door on a reciprocal basis to foreign imports and foreign investment, a policy that's already boosted Canadian trade, as the second of these reports will show.

Two-Way Trade

Suddenly, with a huge, avaricious consumer market here, trade in manufactured goods has become a two-way street as tariff rates have been reduced. Only 32 items, mainly agricultural, remain on the restricted lists.

Paradoxically, it's the galloping prosperity of Japan that causes the deepest anxiety.

There is full employment: so full, in fact, that companies are in undignified competition for university graduates. The annual average income per household last year was $6,150, up more than 11 per cent from the 1971 figure.

Japanese millionaires probably out-number American millionaires. The latest tax evasion case, involving the board chairman of a construction firm, is for just under a million dollars in undeclared profits last year from housing and stock market speculation.

Some 95 per cent of Japanese homes have washing machines and refrigerators, an increasing number of them imported, American-made General Electric and Whirlpool products because the Japanese makers, uncharacteristically, hadn't anticipated a need for larger storage space for frozen foods.

Calorie-consumption, closing fast on European and North American levels, is so dramatically increased that, for the first time, the western ailments of obesity, high blood pressure and diabetes are concerning the medicine men.

Seven out of 10 Japanese families now own a color television set (the over-all figure including black-and-white sets is 1.3 per household) and one of every four families owns a car, often on the easy-credit, 36-months-to-pay plan.

So many Japanese are into the big money for the first time that there's a nouveau riche class that visibly irritates those who've had it all along. One industrialist was quoted the other day in Asahi Shimbun (circulation: above five million) that people with poor manners, not even the social graces of eating properly, are travelling abroad, a poor advertisement for Japanese culture and, what's more, travelling in loud groups that antagonize their foreign hosts.

The concern of absolutely everyone is simply this: How long can it last and what happens if it doesn't?

Making the Bundle

In an ornate, Italian-style bar in Osaka's Royal Hotel the man next to me is an East Indian from Bombay. He is making the bundle, he freely admits, bringing in frozen prawns from the unpolluted Indian Ocean. He is drinking Courvoisier at about $12 for a two-ounce splash.

"This country is like a balloon," he marvels. "It is constantly expanding, growing bigger and bigger. One looks at it with fascination wondering when it will finally burst."

If that day comes then everyone will have need of The Emergency Bag.

Ralph Stanley Carpenter, 26, and Kenneth Henry Carpenter, 27, both of North Vancouver; John Colin Thomson, 21, Vancouver; Brian Edward Lewis, 21, Nanaimo; Andrew George Dumyn, 31, Quatsino Sound; Denny Wilcher, 24, and Gary Lee Jackson, both of the U.S.; all from the Gondola.

The seven men from the Gondola are also charged with conspiracy to import narcotics into Canada, as are Sonoda, O'Brien and Derenzy from the Marysville.

After facing the charges, Ralph Carpenter, Dumyn, Thomson and Lewis were granted bail of $5,000 and two sureties each.

The others were remanded in custody to Tuesday.

Inspector R. N. Heywood of North Vancouver RCMP said Friday that a couple of shots were fired in the air when RCMP stopped the Gondola near the head of Quatsino Sound Saturday.

He said there were no shots as RCMP and sailors on board the destroyer-escort HMCS MacKenzie stopped the Marysville.

A search of the two vessels produced no trace of drugs. The 1,000-pound cache found Wednesday has a street value estimated at $1 million.

OBSCENITY QUERY BANS MALE PIN-UP

CLEVELAND (UPI) — "Playgirl," the female version of "Playboy" — complete with a nude male centrefold — has been taken off Cleveland newsstands.

Magazine distributor George Klein said the publication would remain off the newsstands until he and his attorneys study last week's U.S. Supreme Court decision to allow local communities to judge obscenity.

"Playgirl" publisher Douglas Lambert said Cleveland was the only U.S. city where the magazine was not available.

One newsstand operator said several women had called asking what had happened to the magazine.

Good Wet Idea But Where?

Now, let me see; I could put it over beside the Garry Oaks, under those two young Douglas Firs. There'll be plenty of nearby branches for drying-off perches and the nearest dense cover would be far enough away to discourage all but the most persistent cat.

But that spot over in front of the Grand Fir looks good too. It'll be out in the sun, in plain view of the living room, and a good place for photography.

On the other hand, cats could hide out in the fir's dense foliage and have an easy shot at any wet birds. Besides there's no good safety perches nearby.

Like a housewife trying to decide where to locate her new sewing machine, here I was, armed with a shovel and an idea but thwarted by a choice of several alternatives.

The idea was a bird bath; the problem, where to put it.

It may be a little late in the season for such decisions but, with the almost certain prospect of several weeks of hot, dry weather ahead, I was operating on the principle of better late than never.

Some of you may have already faced this problem and solved it with one of those ornamental plastic stands which are not only pleasing to the eye but easy to move around if your first choice of location doesn't work out.

But, in this case at least, the easy way was not for me. My way involved a more permanent, and natural, arrangement and one which demanded sober deliberation.

Mine was to be a home-grown affair of gravel, wire, sand and cement set at ground level and arranged to look as much like the real thing — a rain pool — as is humanly possible.

It simply involved scraping out a shallow depression, 4 to 8 inches deep and 2 or 3 feet in diameter, laying a sheet of chicken wire over the bottom, lining with gravel and small boulders and covering the whole works with a good, thick, rough mixture of home-made cement.

The result would be a shallow cement pan, about an inch deep at one end and sloping gently to 4 or 5 inches deep at the other.

Filled with water, and properly located where it could reflect the patterns of overhanging foliage, this kind of bird bath would be irresistible.

If such a construction effort taxes your abilities, there are simple alternatives which, to the birds at least, are just as effective.

There's the cake pan bird bath, the garbage can lid bath or the depression-in-the-rock bird bath. All are quite effective and require only a regular and consistent supply of water to make them attractive.

If you choose any metal pan — and this applies to the commercial plastic baths too — some means of roughing-up the surface is necessary..

Birds are no different than we are when it comes to slippery surfaces. They like a good footing too.

A light coat of any old waste paint, sprinkled with sand before it dries, will do the trick. And a flat rock placed strategically in the pan adds to its attractiveness.

Now, where was I? Oh, yes — the choice between the Douglas Firs and the Grand Fir.

What the heck, it's too hot today for digging. I'll leave it for now; the garbage can lid can still do.

Pollution Curb Bill Set at $43 Million

Rayonier would have to spend close to $43 million to meet pollution restrictions placed on its Port Alice pulp mill, the company told the Pollution Control Board Friday.

Hauling mill sludge by barge out to sea for dumping or pumping it into a man-made lagoon in Neroutsos Inlet are among plans being considered to achieve pollution limits ordered for the mill by 1979.

But it is not the capital costs which has Rayonier appealing the pollution limits, set for its north island mill three months ago by William Venables, the province's director of pollution control.

Rayonier argued Friday that the controls' effect on operating costs will jump the production price by about $30 a ton of pulp.

At the outset of the appeal last week Rayonier announced it is going to build a $31.1 million recovery boiler but asked for a six- to nine-month extention on the deadline of Dec. 31, 1975, set by Venables.

It has spent much of the six days of testimony so far arguing that Venables' order to immediately raise the oxygen content of Neroutsos Inlet is not practical or necessary for marine life there.

The recovery boiler is expected to capture about 95 per cent of the spent sulphite liquor left after pulp processing and now being discharged into Neroutsos. Mill wastes use up oxygen from the water as they are broken down by bacteria.

Edward Button, manager of environmental enginerrying for ITT Rayonier, told the board Friday the boiler will drop the oxygen load from mill effluent on Neroutsos waters well below the limits set for the end of 1975. The nine Rayonier pulp mills in North America are part of the giant U.S. based conglomerate, International Telephone and Telegraph Corp.

But meeting the stricter standards for the end of 1978 will mean adding more abatement systems, at a capital cost of about $12 million.

The two alternatives being considered are a slow aeration system, which involves dumping of mill sludge into a lagoon, or an activated sludge system, which would present the company with the problem of getting rid of about 25 tons of sludge a day, possibly by haulilng it away by barge for dumping well out to sea.

Several of about 15 experts called by Rayonier so far in the appeal have been at pains to point out that the Port Alice mill, one of only two sulphite mills in the porvince, involves a dissolving pulp process which generates more waste because it turns out a more refined product.

Button noted that the recovery boiler will mean over $2 million a year in operating savings through recovery of wood fibre, lower chemical and fuel consumption. But borrowing costs, depreciation, taxes and insurance would more than offset the savings, leaving a net additional operating cost of about $2 million annually.

The engineer said the company would dearly love more time to get the recovery boiler operational because it is felt "hundreds of thousands of dollars" could be saved if Rayonier could gather some practical experience from the prototype boiler going in at Port Angeles.

While he has given up hope of getting that kind of time, the company will still need at least five months past the 1975 deadline to put the Port Alice recovery boiler to work, he said.

The hearing adjourned Friday for a week. It will resume July 16 at the Law Courts.

Suffering Nets $375 For Sidney Couple

The provincial government has awarded compensation of $375 to a Sidney couple whose property was affected by construction of the Pat Bay Highway improvements.

The award is being made to Harry Lloyd Murray and Rowena Murray of 1896 Swartz Bay Road.

A cabinet order-in-council released today says the compensation is being given because the Murrays suffered loss of "air, light and view" as a result of the Pat Bay Highway construction project.

The payment was described as an "ex gratia" payment not holding the government responsible for the Murrays' loss.

Conquer Cancer Campaign Returns Lag

The Greater Victoria Conquer Cancer Campaign is experiencing a slight lull in returns, Wilfred Burton, executive officer of the Canadian Cancer Society's Vancouver Island branch, said today.

Contributions total $86,000, $14,000 short of the $100,000 target, he said.

But he is optimistic the society will reach its objective in two months.

The latest statistics for B.C. show that one of four persons will likely develop cancer, he said. Two out of three families will experience the tragedy of cancer.

Mr. Levi Sets the Date

The announcement of Human Resources Minister Norman Levi that sweeping changes will be made in the administration of social welfare and child care in the Capital Regional District, starting September 1, is a welcome one to the many local people who have worked for this reform, and it should be similarly greeted by the thousands who will benefit from a better and more efficient distribution of services to the public.

It is just over three and a half years since the concept of streamlined welfare administration and improved provision of services was endorsed by the Capital Regional District Board. With Regional and provincial government financing the Community Council undertook the formal study and eventually won the approval of the Regional District Board and the local municipal councils for the resulting recommendations.

Those recommendations, interpreted in greater detail by a government-appointed committee, form the basis of the plan now announced by Mr. Levi. It is commendable that his government has done what the previous government, due to Mr. Gaglardi's foot-dragging, failed to do.

Although the new organization of services will remain for the time being under direct provincial government control, the intention is that it will soon come under full Regional District Board authority. The new Victoria arrangement, in fact, is a pilot project for similar systems to be set up in Vancouver —a much more complex situation — and other provincial regions.

As outlined in yesterday's press reports, the plan calls for a dozen neighborhood offices throughout Greater Victoria and the surrounding area which will dispense counselling, child care, welfare cheques, rehabilitation and employment services including services to the aged, and perform other functions. Thus, the work of the former Family and Children's Service, the social services departments of Victoria and of Saanich, and local offices of the provincial department will be integrated in the neighborhood depots. In addition, the valuable community information centre which recently had to close its switchboard for lack of finances will be revived under the new arrangement.

The benefits of this far-reaching reorganization should soon become evident, and it may be expected that still further functions could be added as the system is established.

Understandably, Mr. Levi would like to see the arrangement fully operative before handing it over to the Regional control. It is to be hoped that he will allow full opportunity for the Regional Board to acquire expertise in this field as quickly as possible.

Apart from the professional administrators of the system there is an important provision for advisory committees to assist each neighborhood office, and a central advisory committee to work with the director of the overall Regional system. These committees, on the basis of many years of local experience with similar volunteer boards guiding, for instance, the Family and Children's Service, the Community Council, the Community Chest and other services, should be drawn from as wide a cross-section of the community as possible so that they may tap the many interested and informed citizens who provide the backbone of local volunteer enterprises.

The new system will be the product of many months of study, proposals and refinement and should mark a major step forward in the administration of the growing volume of social services now demanded by the public. It is to Greater Victoria's credit that it should have been selected as the trial site for so important a project. The step deserves the full support of all participants, recipients and observers in the social welfare scene.

The Mouse Should Roar

There is something disturbing about the United States providing Canada with "guidelines" for allocating Canadian oil to U.S. customers. And it was embarassing last week when the Nixon administration opened the doors to Canadian oil a few days after Canada imposed petroleum export controls. Don't they even notice our government's actions?

In the U.S. state department there is a so-called "Canadian desk." Canadian policies affecting the U.S. are duly noted, analyzed, and passed on to higher officials, including the president, presumably. Thus, the timing of the new U.S. import policy regarding Canadian oil could be interpreted as a not so subtle diplomatic hint — the message being, if you cut us off we can make things pretty embarassing for you.

Now a treasury department official is quoted as saying, "We have been working with the Canadians to give them a better basis for allocating their exports without trying to tell them how to do it." That sounds contradictory. How do you give someone guidelines without telling them how to do it? Worrying about U.S. intentions is an indelible part of the national psyche. A mouse who sleeps with an elephant is bound to have neuroses. But when the elephant hogs the bed covers the mouse must learn to roar.

Prefabricated Pubs

Vague talk about neighorhood pubs in B.C. has prompted a Toronto businessman to come West flogging something which he refers to as an "instant British pub."

We can manufacture a complete setting that looks, smells and feels like a real British pub, the man says, adding that nothing is made of plastic, and the wood can be made to look 400 years old.

Just what B.C. needs — an ersatz British pub that can be thrown together in three weeks. Too bad we can't change provincial drinking habits as quickly as the decor. But could we really have a British pub without British pub users? Or do they come in prematurely aged oak too?

B.C. and the Constitution

OTTAWA — There exists, apparently, a rather widespread impression that the federal government has now lost the powers of reservation or disallowance of provincial statutes which it formerly exercised in accordance with provisions of the British North America Act.

The argument is sometimes that the powers have been lost through simple disuse. At other times it is argued, or assumed, that the powers are incompatible with modern ideas of federalism; that, accordingly, no federal government would now resort to them; and they should therefore be deleted from the constitution.

In these circumstances, recent proceedings in the Senate may occasion some surprise. For that House has been considering an urgent constitutional matter brought to its attention by Senator van Roggen of Vancouver; namely British Columbia legislation (the Pacific National Exhibition Bill) voiding existing contracts and the desirability of federal intervention to avert a potentially dangerous action.

Beyond the Issue

The interesting aspect of this debate, which has ranged far beyond the issue of immediate concern to Mr. van Roggen, is that it has been taken very seriously indeed by all the speakers, including some of the best known constitutionalists in Canada. It may be even more remarkable, given the misconceptions now surrounding the subject, that only Senator Ernest Manning expressed emphatic opposition, and even then with qualifications, to the reserve powers.

Mr. Manning would be expected to hold strong feelings on the subject; he was heir-apparent to the late William Aberhart when the famous Social Credit legislation was set aside or disallowed by the King government. His argument was the simple one that such action today would cause great public bitterness in the affected province.

Apart from Mr. Manning, however, the speakers divided along lines once familiar in this country. Whereas Eugene Forsey declared himself "an unrevised and unrepentant follower of Sir John Alexander Macdonald," who took a broad view of the reserve powers and was not reluctant to use them, Carl Goldenberg held that they should be resorted to only in the "most unusual circumstances." In effect, Mr. Goldenberg reasserted the pre-Aberhart Liberal view; that questions involving fairness were best left to provincial electors and those involving jurisdiction to the courts.

A notion may also have developed that reservation and disallowance are a lost federal cause, with appeal only to ultra-conservatives, or perhaps to some business interests. Yet Senator Forsey, who recalled that he had been active on four occasions in drafting petitions calling on the federal government to use its powers, did so either on behalf of a civil rights organization or on behalf of the labor unions. It is notable also that Mr. van Roggen in the present case was moved partly by protests of the Teamsters whose president, Senator Lawson, declared that the controversial B.C. clause would justify his union in declaring its collective agreements void in mid-term, although he later modified this stand.

. . . taken very seriously

The argument that adequate protection is provided by the courts would have more substance if governments showed greater willingness to seek judicial decisions. In fact, as Senator Forsey noted, it took 20 years to bring the infamous Padlock law to the attention of the Supreme Court of Canada. Such protection, however satisfactory to some theorists, may well mean that affected citizens sustain irreparable damage.

No one suggested that the debate was irrelevant, as it would certainly have been if the reserve powers were long since dead. As Mr. Goldenberg was replying to the strong case developed by Senators van Roggen and Forsey, his views are in this respect particularly significant. He said among other things:

"I know that Senator Forsey has expressed the view that Parliament has the power to advise on executive acts — I accept that — but, as Edward Blake said in 1890, in a debate on this very subject in the other place, it is 'a power to be exercised with reserve.'"

Then later:

"In the absence of enforceable constitutional guarantees, disallowance may at some time be necessary to protect fundamental civil rights or minority rights. It may be necessary to protect the rights of residents of other provinces who have no political remedy against the government responsible for the legislation. It might also have to be used in a case where provincial legislation interferes seriously with the operation of federal legislation and policy and the problem cannot be solved by inter-governmental compromise . . ."

Large Admissions

These are quite large admissions. They suggest that it is irresponsible, to say the least, to talk as if the reserve powers were no longer available to the federal government.

In fact, as was pointed out by Mr. van Roggen, the constitutional proposals put forward by the prime minister, which did envision abolition of these powers, were hopefully based on the assumption that a Bill of Rights binding on all governments could be enshrined in the constitution. There has been no agreement on such a Bill and none appears now to be in prospect.

Thus the situation remains as it was. The federal government retains the powers of reservation and disallowance used, often effectively, by its predecessors. If it refuses to use them in cases of necessity, where other protections are of no avail to citizens sustaining injury or injustice, it will be open, as its predecessors were on like occasions, to the charge of dereliction of duty.

TOM WICKER

'I Belonged on Those Lists'

CHICAGO — I have had a mixed reaction to being named on a long "master list" of enemies of Richard Nixon and his Administration, and on another list of "less than 20" particular enemies that John Dean forwarded on Sept. 14, 1971, to an aide of H. R. Haldeman.

My first emotion was plain indignation. Like most of the American people, I tend — probably too much so in any case — to identify the President with the nation, hence with its people. I know I am not an enemy of the nation or of the people, and I resent any such suggestion.

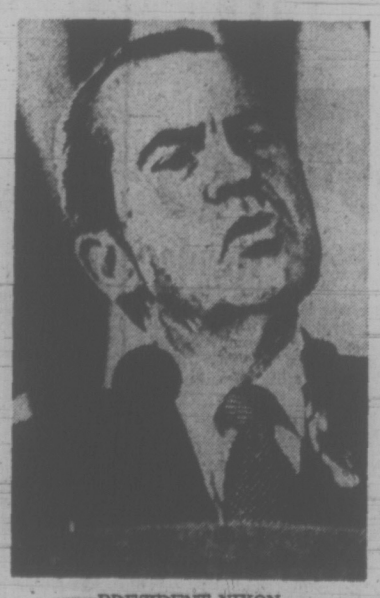
But I also felt a flash of fear. I have relatives, children, who could be hurt; like anyone else, I have human flaws that clever investigators might exploit, and a reasonably good name of which I am jealous.

A Kind of Puzzlement

But natural indignation and ignoble fear quickly faded in a kind of puzzlement. I would never have expected the Nixon Administration to list me as a friend, nor do I want any administration to do so. But I had always thought that political conflict was in the nature of "agreeing to disagree" — that no matter how bitter and vigorously expressed their political differences might become, political opponents could maintain a civil relationship and be mutually respectful at least of all rights and integrity of the other.

In his last years in office, for example, President Johnson would have had every reason — if he thought about it at all — to be strongly resentful of my expressed attitude on his conduct of the war in Vietnam. But it never occurred to me then that I or anyone would be placed by him on a list of "enemies" to "screw" through tax investigation or other abuses of governmental power. Nor do I believe the Johnson Administration did any such thing; the Nixon Administration's determination to "get" or "screw" political opponents, even potential opponents, by any means illegal or otherwise, seems to me far beyond any reasonable view of the nature of democracy, or any generally accepted political practice.

Even so, I was also amazed, on reading the "master list," the smaller Dean list, and a "priority" list of enemies prepared by Charles Colson, another Nixon aide, to discover how ludicrous all this listing was.



PRESIDENT NIXON
. . . nothing better to do?

Not that most of the people on the lists are not estimable; but what were these important men doing, in their high offices, taking time out from the great national affairs to put down the names of movie stars, reporters, businessmen, political contributors, and the like, as "enemies" demanding surreptitious counterattack? From the most powerful institution in the world, did these petty men have nothing better to do than to gaze, with fear and paranoia, at outspoken citizens, and call them "enemies" for being so?

In fact, the comic-opera aspects of the "enemies" lists tempted me to the kind of flippancy and derision that the witty Ken Galbraith — himself on the "master list" — recently recommended as the best way to deal with the Nixon Administration. All sorts of wisecracks suggest themselves — "the King's Honors List," for example — but the truth is that however ludicrous they may be, these lists are not really funny.

They are sad. They are sad because they show that even great power did not make of Nixon and his aides anything but small and fearful men. They are sad because they disclose a great nation being led by men unworthy of her and her history.

They are sad because they represent so graphically, for so many people, the last crumbling of illusion — the final evidence that there is nothing magical or ennobling about the Presidency, nothing about American power that makes it less corrupting than any other brand of power.

Sad, But Hopeful

But if the enemy lists are sad for those reasons, like so many other aspects of the Watergate revelations, they are hopeful, too. Disillusionment is enlightenment; to know things as they are is better than to believe things as they seem. The lists confirm what the 1970 internal security plan and the Ellsberg break-in suggested—that the Watergate burglary itself was only the tip of the knife, that American democracy has been retrieved in the nick of time from the police state it so nearly became.

That is why, once indignation and fear had passed, the temptation to laugh had been overcome, and puzzlement had turned to sadness, I knew I belonged on those lists. Of such people as those who compiled them, and the man they served so zealously, who would not be an enemy?

A Nature Ramble With Skipper

FREEMAN KING

It is camping time again for lots of us who like to go beyond the rush of everyday life.

We must be ever mindful in our camping expeditions not to destroy the delicate balance of nature.

The conservation and preservation of the natural things around us should be ever considered. Don't throw any of your garbage into a stream or lake. This is the home of fish and many other little creatures that live in this habitat. They don't want their home poisoned.

When you make your camp fire don't use any more wood than you have to, and make sure you use only dead wood. Do not cut down a living tree. You know it takes a long time for a tree to grow and it is one of the ways in which nature assures that rains will be held in the ground. So keep our watershed intact and help prevent erosion.

Have you ever thought about the little creatures like the ants, beetles and even the slugs that are helping to break down the dead limbs to help build a new living soil? Let's leave them undisturbed to go about their business.

When you stop to make an overnight camp make sure that you dig down to mineral soil before you make your fire and that you are away from an old downed log or a living tree.

Don't be a litter bug in the bush. Why cast your lunch wrappings and boxes away or that empty cigarette box away if it can be burned? If you have used cans burn them out, crush them and bury them. If you smoke don't smoke along the walk but stop, have your smoke, then stub the butt and grind it on a rock or into the ground and scatter it away.

Don't leave bottles or any glass where you travel. It could cause a forest fire which will destroy not only the bush but home of many living things, all of which are a part of the living green world.

If you are camping for a few days, just wander around and take note of the wonders near you. What kind of plants grow here? Are there any animals and what kind of birds inhabit this particular place? Are there many insects, if so what are they? Remember that all these things are a part of the environment in which you are now living.

When you leave make sure that your fire is OUT, yes, put it OUT several times to make sure. Can you put your hand in the fireplace and not feel any heat? Have you left any garbage around?

When you leave be sure that you left it so that no one can ever say some litterbug stopped here. This is your forest land do not destroy it.

Clan Gathering

A big rally of Frasers will be held in Pictou County on July 28 and 29 bringing old friends together. In attendance will be Hon. Andrew Fraser, son of Lord Lovat, Chief of Clan Fraser. The rally follows the royal visit commemorating the landing of the Ship Hector in 1773 at Pictou.

Many Frasers were aboard the Hector which brought the first Highlanders to Nova Scotia; the old Dutch ship was followed by many others, bringing many clansmen here over a period of 75 years — which is why there are so many 'Macs' in northern Nova Scotia.

Many Frasers in the Vancouver and Victoria area came from Pictou County where they had settled originally after fleeing troubles in the "Old Country".

All will be most welcome in the "Land of the Sons of Hector — Pictou County". — Hilda Fraser, 96 Herbert St., New Glasgow, N.S.

ATLIN RESIDENTS have spruced up old lake steamer Tarahne with fresh paint and put her up on blocks beside town which also includes transported historic theatre and grocery store from nearby gold rush centre of Discovery.

A Town Tries to Rescue History

By JAMES WARDROP

(This is another article in a series by staff members of the Provincial Museum on the environment and history of British Columbia. Wardrop is acting curator of history.)

Rusting steam shovels, beached lake steamers, abandoned log cabins — these are but a few of the mementos remaining from the glorious gold rush days of Atlin.

Visiting this quiet town of 300 residents in the northwest corner of B.C. is an exciting experience. Not only is there history staring in your face at every corner but also magnificent scenery tempting you to forget the well-known beauty spots such as Banff or Jasper. Situated on the shores of Atlin Lake, the town looks across at some of the most beautiful mountains in the country.

When a winter storm arises, whipping up the lake and adding more snow to the rugged coastal mountains, one realizes it would have taken a powerful lure to bring the thousands of people who once composed the twin towns of Atlin and Discovery. That lure was the same that tempted tens of thousands of men over the Chilcoot Pass from Skagway and into the Yukon River basin—gold.

While the Klondike Gold Rush in the Yukon Territories was making headlines around the world, a couple of prospectors steered towards the south. Between Atlin Lake and Surprise Lake, they found gold on Pine Creek. Their name for the new claim was "Discovery".

Diehards Stayed

Within a few years, thousands of men were living in the new boom town also known as Discovery. Many were mining the creeks while just as many were mining the men. Among the gold seekers was Rex Beach, who later wrote such popular books as "The Spoilers" about gold rushes and frontier life.

Typical of so many mining camps, there were legal hassles. One disagreement about sizes of claims resulted in a government commission which included a young lawyer, Richard McBride, who later became premier of B.C. It was exciting while it lasted but Discovery went the way of so many other gold rush towns. It died within a few years. The easy gold was gone and only a few diehard prospectors remained.

What's left is a few wooden shells reminiscent of past grandeur. Among the surviving buildings is the original cabin built on "Discovery" claim by Fritz Miller and Kenneth McLaren. Part of its longevity can perhaps be attributed to the material used for roofing: flattened kerosene tins which protected the pole roof from snow and water.

He's Dam Mad

The present owner of the Discovery claim cabin is "Whispering" Bill Husselbee. Since he hiked overland from the Skeena country in 1930, he has been prospecting and working the creeks. During the years he's witnessed tourists come in and tear apart walls and break in doors in search of gold, bottles, or lamps. They've left nothing but destruction for other visitors to view. It prompted "Whispering Bill" to pencil this note on his door:

"this Cabin belong to W. G. Hosselbee, Atlin. Keep out i am dam mad at peoples braking in heer and there is not eny gold in their or eny think Else werth a dam ant do not brake in ore brake the Door down like the other rats."

Nearby Atlin, just eight miles to the west, has suffered as well but the presence of a couple of hundred residents probably saved it from similar destruction. The town has dozens of buildings of historical significance. Along the lakeshore are a number of log cabins built by the first gold seekers in 1898-99. The town centre includes some buildings towed in from Discovery when that town was abandoned. Some, like the old theatre, complete with seats, stand empty today. It is for sale but interested people are working to save it from demolition.

On the beach are two of the old lake steamers, symbols of a day when the lake was the only route in and out of town. One boat, the Atlinto, was built in 1906 when the town was still booming. The other, the Tarahne, was constructed in the 1920's to serve what was quite a tourist trade for that era. It now lies a mere 100 yards from the new Kootenay Hotel. That it is on blocks and sports a fresh coat of paint is to the credit of the village residents.

With minimal financial assistance, the people of Atlin have taken giant strides towards preserving their heritage. They have hauled in rusting steam shovels from the gold creeks to save them from vandals and the weather. They have scoured the scenes of past hustle and bustle to retrieve what remaining artifacts they can find. Now the artifacts lie in the old courthouse, built in 1901, so all residents and tourists can visit and share in the richness of their history.

The value of the hard and often unrewarding work performed by the residents of Atlin can be better appreciated by British Columbians when they realize the importance of Atlin to our historical development. It was the scene of the last major gold rush in the province and it witnessed the gamut of methods of gold mining technology. Gold panning, sluicing, hydraulic monitoring, dredging, steam shovels and draglines were all utilized to get the gold 50 to 75 years ago.

A New Boom

Today one can visit Atlin in the summer and find Bill Husselbee panning or sluicing for gold. It is still there in quantities sufficient to make it all worthwhile. In fact, one would be lucky to find room to stake a claim today, especially with the soaring price of gold. The dredges and steam shovels are gone but caterpillars now perform the same duties for man.

With today's increasing awareness of the need to preserve our heritage and recognize its real value, we must be thankful the people of Atlin have done so much. We should try to encourage them further. Some aid to help them save the remaining buildings and artifacts could help them save our past.

Canada Energy Policy: There Isn't Any Hurry

By ANTHONY WESTELL

OTTAWA — A visiting British industrialist called on Energy Minister Donald Macdonald recently and politely asked permission to give a word of advice on how Canada should develop its resources. Macdonald braced for a lecture on the folly of discouraging foreign investment and hesitating over the Mackenzie pipeline. Instead he was told: "Go slowly. Don't be in a hurry to make decisions."

The visitor's view ran exactly contrary to the conventional opinion in this country, where there is a growing demand for an instant National Energy Policy — in capital letters, with bells on. But the advice squares well with the reality of the situation as it is seen by Macdonald and by Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau.

The government's view is that Canada is not in an energy crisis. There are no real shortages. No city brownouts, no factories closed, only a few service stations temporarily short of supplies because they cannot buy cut-price gasoline.

Nor is there any danger of Canada being sucked dry by United States demand. Electric power and natural gas have for years been under export control. Now crude oil and refined products such as gasoline and heating oil are also under control.

So there is no need for Canada to make instant long-term decisions about energy development. As the influential deputy energy minister, Jack Austin, put it in a speech this week: "The energy situation needs a long and cool look both at domestic and international sources of supply to see what is available, where it is available, for how long will it be available and at what price will it be available."

It's been long in preparation. With his tendency to take the broad general view of a problem, Trudeau first asked for a study of all forms of energy way back in 1970. Joe Greene's ill health when he was energy minister slowed the project, and Macdonald took over the department in January, 1972, with orders to get moving.

A team of officials from the department, the National Energy Board, Atomic Energy of Canada and other agencies compiled the information and analysis into two formidable volumes: 286 pages of report backed by 353 pages of appendices.

It's a cool document because it offers analysis rather than recommendations. Officials concede that their studies are bound to include value judgments, but they have tried to be unbiased and neutral when discussing options open to Canada.

When the cabinet got a draft of the document and thought that it seemed to put the arguments in favor of a national petroleum corporation to compete with the foreign-owned giants more strongly than the arguments against, Macdonald was told to water it down so that bias would not be evident. That didn't mean the government was against the idea of a publicly owned corporation, but only that it isn't yet ready to make up its mind, and sees no reason to.

Even if the cabinet did not feel it had time in hand, it would have to try to make some, because it simply does not have the power to make national energy policy on its own initiative. Much of the energy industry is under provincial control. Alberta, for example, effectively controls the price of natural gas produced within its own borders, and provincially owned utilities control most of the electric power in Canada.

This is why Macdonald went this week on a cross-country tour to find out what the provinces think of his white paper analysis of the issues and how they want to proceed to the business of making firm policy decisions. Probably there will be a series of federal-provincial conferences starting in the fall to deal with different sectors of the energy problem.

All the provinces are interested in oil, although for different reasons. The West produces it; Ontario consumes it; Quebec imports it from abroad to refine; the Atlantic provinces are hoping to find it off their coasts, and, meantime, to develop refinery industry importing crude and selling products to the energy-starved U.S. market. Reconciling all the competing interests will require the skill and patience of a diplomat — not qualities for which "Thumper" Macdonald is renowned.

Natural gas is of concern mainly to the West where it is produced and to Ontario and Quebec where it is consumed. They will probably have a separate conference with Ottawa.

Encouraged by Ottawa, the provinces have to decide how far they want to go in co-ordinating their hydro commissions to form a national grid.

About the only area in which Ottawa can move on its own is in dealing with uranium, a federal jurisdiction. Macdonald hopes to have legislation before Parliament in the fall ensuring that it is developed under Canadian rather than foreign control.

But it will be next year at the earliest before Ottawa and the provinces are ready to make other policy decisions which can add up to a National Energy Policy.

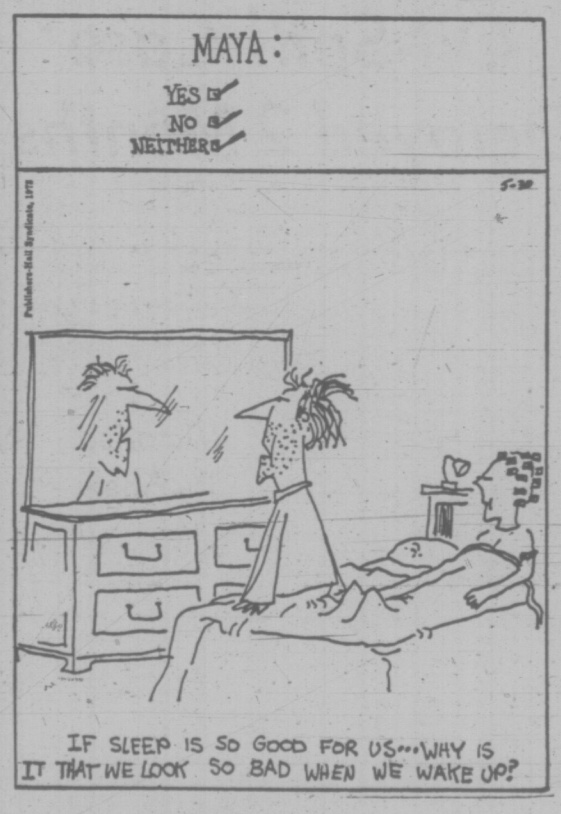
That's assuming that the process of participation, consultation and policy development goes smoothly. But it seldom does. Time after time in the last few years, the Trudeau government has produced white papers for public discussion, only to see them overtaken by events, so that the cabinet is finally forced to rush forward with hasty and ill-prepared legislation.

In this case, it is far from certain that the minority government will even be around next year to begin to act upon the studies.

So Canada is still a long way from deciding upon a national policy. But as the British industrialist told Macdonald, it will probably pay us in the long run to sit back, study our cards and play them slowly as the growing world demand forces up the value of our reserves.



Long Way From Watergate

By ANTHONY LEWIS

ALDEBURGH, England — It is noon when Billy Burrell's boat comes in. The men haul her up on the stony beach and unload the baskets of fish. There are already half a dozen customers waiting at Billy's small hut for the fresh-caught sole and skate.

Someone asks if he can order lobster ahead for Wednesday. "Yes sir," says Billy, "if we get any Wednesday. But you be sure you're here before 3 o'clock. We go home when we run out, and that's likely to be by 3."

On the high street of the village, among the other small shops, there is a dairy. Do they have any cream today? The girl lifts a white enamel pitcher and pours thick yellow cream into a container.

Aldeburgh is yesteryear: Victorian cottages, roses on the high street, and most of all, old-fashioned attitudes. It is a place where men like Billy Burrell perform their craft without needing to compete for more and more.

It is small, direct, personal. And it works by restraint, by self-discipline. No enormous new hotels mar the scale of the sea-front; the planning authorities would stop any such idea, fortified by overwhelming public opinion that it would not do. One must not be too greedy or too powerful. The world of Aldeburgh is a world of moderation, of respect for proportion.

For an American visitor, unable to escape the obession of his homeland, the inevitable contrast is with the world revealed by Watergate: a world of excess, of inhumanity, of conspiratorial indirectness of disrespect for rules. A gross world, where the dominant emotion is hunger for power.

The British generally, not only in this old-fashioned corner of East Anglia, evidently find Watergate extremely difficult to understand: not just the original crimes, but the way the hearings and the investigations are proceeding. It is all so crude, so disordered.

Even the editors of The Times of London find themselves out of their depth. The other day they compared Watergate to a current local corruption case of bribery by an architectural firm to get official business, and concluded that the essence of the two affairs was the same! It was as if they were looking across the Atlantic through the wrong end of the telescope in order to reduce the high political crimes of Watergate to the size of their own imagination.

Misuse of power on so enormous a scale is simply unimaginable here. Because they do not appreciate the occasion for it, some Britons cannot understand the public method of the Senate committee's proceedings. The correctives here are quiet and internal.

The Aldeburgh Festival, in its own very special way, reflects the values of the community. It eschews the grand, the overblown, the vulgar. It prefers music on an intimate scale, and performances are in the traditional community buildings of these East Suffolk villages: churches, a small town hall, a malt barn marvelously converted to a concert hall.

BRITTEN
... his vision

It is the vision of one man, Benjamin Britten, helped by his friends and admirers. The result is unique in its high standards of performance, its roots in the community, its sophisticated choice of music.

But inevitably it has its critics, too, especially those who consider Britten's own music too internalized, too restrained, too lacking in communicated passion.

But passion may be internal, may be repressed, and there can be art of a high order in showing it in just those terms. That is the achievement of Benjamin Britten in the opera that has just had its premiere at this festival, "Death in Venice."

Poignant circumstances have lent further emotion to its story of destiny and death. Britten had to have heart surgery as he finished the opera, and while recuperating has not been allowed at rehearsals or performances. His friend and Aldeburgh collaborator of many years, Peter Pears, has carried on in the extremely demanding main singing role of Aschenbach.

In the Thomas Mann story, Aschenbach is a symbol of order and self-discipline. Then, on his fated trip to Venice, he falls in love with the young Polish boy, lets go the restraints, disintegrates and dies. A high point of the opera comes when Pears, abandoning himself to his passion, sings:

> "But what is self-possession? What is reason, moral sense, what is art itself compared to the rewards of chaos?"

And so, in the small peaceful setting of Aldeburgh, we find powerful illumination of a great contemporary theme of life and art: the conflict of chaos and order.

Evidence After Change of Plea

Sharon Dannenberg is due to testify in county court next week at what previously had been her own trial after unexpectedly pleading guilty Thursday to one part of a two-count conspiracy charge.

Dannenberg, 29, also known as Sharon Rogers, was one of five Victorians charged with conspiracy to traffic heroin and possession of heroin for trafficking.

Also charged are Daniel Hadden, 57; Michael Kincses, 27; Wendy Dance, 25; and Robert Langer, 30.

As the trial entered its third day Thursday, Dannenberg decided to plead guilty to the second portion of the charge.

She appeared in court Friday when Prosecutor Cecil Branson asked that the indictment be amended to name her as a co-conspirator but not actually be charged.

Branson also entered a stay of proceedings for the conspiracy charge against her. This allows the Crown to deal with the charge at a later date.

Judge M. L. Drake allowed both the stay and amendment despite objections by defence lawyers Robert Price and Douglas Macfarlane.

Const. Mike Onischuk of Victoria RCMP drug squad testified he staked out a unit at the Fort Victoria Motel, 340 Island Highway, for two days in September.

Watching through binoculars from a nearby parking lot, he testified he saw "known" heroin addicts going in and out of the unit, occupied by a woman named Linda Anderson.

She is named in the indictment but not charged.

Under cross-examination by Price, representing Kincses and Dance, Onischuck defined an addict as "a person that takes a narcotic called diacetyl morphine, commonly called heroin."

"Take it? The minute they take it they're an addict?" asked Price.

"I didn't say that," replied the officer.

Onischuk told the court he knew some of the people entering the house were addicts because he had checked some on public streets and found needle marks on their arms.

When a narcotics officer checks an addict, Onischuk explained, he will question the addict about the extent of his or her use of heroin.

"Is this standard procedure for heroin addicts to tell you they're heroin addicts," asked Langer's lawyer, Doug Macfarlane.

The officer replied it was.

Cpl. Doug Payne testified he was in the Colony Motor Inn cocktail lounge Oct. 7 when Hadden sat at a table where he was later joined by Dannenberg.

While Payne was watching, Hadden passed a sum of money under the table to Dannenberg, said Payne.

Sgt. David Staples, head of the drug squad, testified earlier that Dannenberg was arrested outside her apartment at 425 Quebec Oct. 26.

The following morning, Payne and Dannenberg returned to the suite and collected several documents to be used as evidence during the trial.

Air Canada In Mess —Tory

OTTAWA (CP) — Progressive Conservative transport critic Don Mazankowski charged Friday that the minority Liberal government is both "afraid and embarrassed" to let the Canadian public know about the mess that Air Canada is in.

Mazankowski (Vegreville) said he suspects that there has been collusion between Air Canada board chairman Yves Pratte and Transport Minister Jean Marchand and that the national airline's president John Baldwin is being "stabbed in the back" by the federal government.

The Conservative spokesman made the comments after Marchand had told the Commons that the government had not yet decided whether the annual reports for 1972 of both the Canadian National Railways and Air Canada could be referred to the standing Parliamentary committee on transport and communication for study.

New Boundaries Backed

OTTAWA (CP) — A bill to stop redistribution of federal electoral boundaries is a ploy by rural MPs who don't want urban voters to have a fair deal, Don Blenkarn (PC-Peel South) said Friday.

Some rural members, many with parliamentary seniority, "are saying representation by population doesn't matter" because they "are worried about their seats," he told the Commons.

Blenkarn said he has been asked by members of his own party, and by government members, not to speak against the bill.

He represents the fast-growing town of Mississauga — population 156,000 — in southern Ontario.

He noted that Government House leader Allan MacEachen, who introduced the bill earlier this week, stands to lose his riding in Cape Beton Island under the redistribution proposals.

The bill would suspend the work of the 10 provincial electoral boundaries commissions, which have drafted new constituency boundaries on the basis of the 1971 census.

MacEachen, introducing the bill for second reading, said it is necessary to prevent the possibility of not being able to call an election for a year because of a technicality.

The technicality is that the chief electoral officer says he would need a year, after redistribution, to prepare for an election.

COBBLE HILL FARMLAND FROZEN

The 760-acre Heather Bank Farm at Cobble Hill is frozen under the Land Commission Act and can't be subdivided for housing, a government spokesman said today.

According to Chris Grant, who along with his father, has been managing the farm since December, 1972, it was hoped the provincial government would take over the farm and turn it into a park.

But he said after waiting six weeks, and receiving no response from the government, it was decided to divide part of the farm into 14 sections and putting them on sale.

The government land-use official said today the owners of the farm have been informed that all of the land is classified as farmland and is affected by the moratorium preventing changing use of lands.

He explained that part of the farm was subdivided into 14 parcels some years ago.

"There is nothing to prevent the owners from selling these 14 parcels of land, but the properties will remain farmlands under the Land Commission Act," he explained. "The owners will not be able to subdivide the land into smaller parcels for housing."

"It appears that the farm was saved from being subdivided by Bill 42," he said.

He added the whole matter is still under review by the land commission.

LAUK PITCH TO BUSINESS

VANCOUVER (CP) — In his first major policy speech since he was appointed provincial Minister of Industry eight weeks ago, Gary Lauk called on businessmen Friday to be unafraid of the socialists and join them in enhancing social justice in British Columbia.

He told the Society of Industrial Accounts that greater social justice could be achieved only with support of responsible private enterpreneurs and by entrepreneural investment to stimulate the economy and enable it to continue to prosper.

Oil-Spill Case Delayed 2 Months

A British freighter will go on trial Sept. 18 on a charge of discharging oil or an oily mixture into the Vancouver harbor April 26.

The trial was set for Friday in Victoria provincial court, but an application by defence lawyer Peter Lowrey set the date ahead two months.

The ship, Baknes, out of London, pleaded not guilty to the charge which was laid by the federal ministry of transport under the Canada Shipping Act and oil pollution prevention regulations.

Maximum fine for the charge is $100,000.

In court Friday, Lowrey asked Judge William Ostler to have the Crown furnish information on the case to the defence.

"This evidence is highly technical and I feel it is necessary to a fair trial for us to have this evidence," Lowrey told the court.

The lawyer outlined difficulties he had in communicating with his clients "who are on the other side of the world."

"We need to know what crew members will need to testify as they are on the ship and travelling from port to port."

Crown prosecutor Dermond Owen-Flood said he would give Lowrey the exact time and date of the alleged offence, a radio message which constitutes part of the Crown's evidence and the certificate of analysis done on the oil allegedly discharged from the ship.

Victorian In Finals

Garibaldi Park

The lofty and lovely Coast Mountains have long drawn superlatives of language from the lips of men. Except for the occasional breach — the Fraser Valley is one, the Skeena River surges through another — the Coast Mountains form an unbroken chain of peaks from the South coast of British Columbia to well within the Yukon, a distance of some 1,000 miles.

In 1860 the crew of one of Her Majesty's ships moored in Howe Sound was moved to name one of the prominent peaks after the Italian patriot Guiseppe Garibaldi; and in 1920 the "natural beauties" of the area, from 30 to 70 miles north of Vancouver were preserved in Garibaldi Park.

The topography, climate and accessibility of Garibaldi Park are such that it is a paradise for the skier, climber, camper, hunter, hiker and fisherman alike. The 480,000 acres, including some 44,000 acres set aside as a special nature conservation area, offer a wide range of awe-inspiring scenery from the panoramic peaks to the rolling alpine meadows.

WILLIAMS SETS SEWAGE STUDY

Resources Minister Robert Williams announced Friday he has commissioned a report by the Pollution Control Branch on the suitability of sewage disposal methods being used by B.C. communities.

Williams said the report will be aimed at helping communities determine which sewage treatment and disposal systems might best suit their needs.

"A community can often become locked into one approach when another system might prove equally good or better," he said.

"Community size, population, density, climatic conditions, soil types and topography must all be taken into account. The circumstances in B.C. communities are extremely varied, and a system that works well in one situation may not be the best solution for another."

The minister said the information report will include details on the circumstances faced by communities throughout the province, and the full range of primary, secondary and tertiary treatment systems and sludge disposal.

It will list the advantages and disadvantages of each system, costs involved and the available avenues for financial assistance.

Williams said he expects the province's municipalities and regional districts will welcome the findings of the report, since there have been numerous requests for more information on treatment systems throughout B.C.

Drug Marts Lose Injunction Bid

VANCOUVER (CP) — Sixty-five Greater Vancouver drug stores operating under a Shopper's Drug Mart franchise on Friday lost their B.C. supreme court bid for an injunction to stop B.C. Federation of Labor from declaring their stores "hot."

The firms sought the injunction before Judge W. E. Hutcheon in Supreme Court chambers after the federation made its declaration June 18. They alleged the "hot" designation amounted to a declaration of boycott.

The court was told that Retail Clerk's Union Local 1518 is the certified bargaining agent for employees of 13 of the drug stores under 13 separate certificates, and that employees at 10 of the stores have been on legal strike since last Feb. 23.

The drug store group in its bid for an injunction claimed that as a result of the B.C. Federation's "hot" declaration, a number of firms that normally supply the group with products have refused to handle orders.

"I am unable to conclude on the evidence that the refusal by these firms to handle any order for the plaintiffs came about from the publication of the "hot" declaration,' 'Judge Hutcheon stated in refusing the injunction.

He held there was lack of proof of "casual connection" between the B.C. Federation's declaration and the difficulties encountered by the drug group.

There is not strike lockout on employees of the other 55 stores.

Cycling is great transportation but traffic can be a problem

Victoria Times
SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1973 9
SECOND SECTION

Cyclists In Full Bloom

The bicycle boom is over, at least as far as sales are concerned, but it's going full tilt in city traffic and in the tourist industry.

Cycle shops report sales levelling off as the market reaches the saturation point. Streets and highways, however, are flooded with a healthy increase in two-wheelers as adults, youngsters and tourists have adopted the latest craze in transportation.

B.C. Ferries report a "terrific" increase in the number of tourists wheeling 10-speed cycles aboard or strapping them to the back of cars, vans and campers.

The ferry service reports that a fee schedule for bicycles hasn't yet been considered.

If statistics provided by Const. Ken Dibden of the Victoria police department are any indication, cyclists are becoming more safety conscious, especially when it comes to motor vehicles.

So far this year, there have been 14 collisions between bicycles and motor vehicles, down from 18 for the same period a year ago. The cyclists, it seems are waking up to the fact that they usually come out second best in such confrontations.

"If you're going to give any advice about the most important rule to follow," Dibden says, "tell cyclists to stick as close to the right hand side of the road as practical."

Pollen Wants B.C. to Stop Foreign Ownership of Land

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said Friday he will urge the provincial government to take steps to prevent all foreigners from owning land in British Columbia.

He said a large amount of speculating in land is done by German, Japanese and Hong Kong interests.

"This type of speculation does not do the community any good. British Columbia should follow the example of the Scandinavian countries where foreign ownership of land is not permitted," he said.

Pollen was commenting in an interview on a statement Thursday by Vancouver Mayor Art Phillips, who said there should be higher property taxes on foreign interests who own land in B.C.

The Vancouver mayor said property taxes on houses should be decreased while taxes were increased for land-holdings — especially by foreign interests.

Phillips said the Greater Vancouver Regional District is looking for ways to discourage land speculation.

Pollen agreed that speculation had to be discouraged but said there was little a municipal government could do.

However, municipalities could urge the provincial government to take strong action against land speculation. He said he would urge the government to ban foreign ownership of land as an important first step.

He said there might be more efficient ways of dealing with speculation rather than by tying it to taxation as suggested by Phillips.

Pollen said foreign ownership of land is an important social question.

Meanwhile, raising the taxes on land while reducing them on improvements (houses) might interfere with municipal revenue.

This approach is not new as it is being used in Ontario and in some U.S. states, including Michigan, but perhaps the time had come to end the practice of financing municipal governments through property taxes, Pollen said.

The present system of financing municipal services through property taxes is making home ownership an unreasonable burden.

While federal and provincial governments had more than enough funds to meet their needs, municipalities were leading a hand-to-mouth existence because of their reliance on property taxation.

Victoria shared Vancouver's concern about speculation but land regulations were purely the prerogative of the provincial government.

However, Victoria would be urging the provincial government to take strong action, particularly on the foreign ownership question.

"Unless we act soon, we will be peasants in a rich man's world," Pollen said.

School Board Buys Land

The Greater Victoria school board will buy three lots of land from the University of Victoria after getting permission from the provincial government Friday.

A cabinet order-in-council released Friday gives the university authorization to sell the three lots to the school board for $53,200. Two of the lots, located on Argyle Street, have houses on them.

District superintendent Jack Longmore said Friday the two houses will be used to accommodate administration staff who now have offices in the Ewing Building. Staff making the move will include research and testing personnel, family life instructors, speech therapists and audio-visual employees.

Space vacated in the Ewing Building will be occupied by Camosun College personnel.

Voiceless Puppies Draw SPCA Protest

A proposed U.S. defence department experiment in which the voice boxes of 200 beagle puppies would be removed for gas experiments has drawn a protest from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

William Leach, president of the Victoria branch of the SPCA, said Friday a telegram is being sent to the American Humane Society protesting a defence department statement that infers the experiment has SPCA backing.

A defence department spokesman said this week the experiment is "in keeping with the dog-use policies of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

Leach explained that the American Humane Society is often referred to as the SPCA in the United States as it is modelled after the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Britain.

"I'm certain that humane societies in Canada and the United States are going to take an interest in this matter," he said.

The matter was first raised by U.S. congressman Les Aspin of Wisconsin, who wrote to the secretary of the U.S. Air Force strongly protesting the experiment, designed to test the effect of aviation pollutants, such as fuel, on the environment.

"Apart from going through these horrible experiments," said Leach, "the animals are usually poorly housed and badly taken care of. A dog may be subjected to the same experiment over and over again and kept alive in intolerable conditions."

In many research programs, Leach added, the voice boxes of animals are removed so they can't be heard when they are frightened or in pain.

David Beeching, secretary-manager of the Victoria SPCA, said there appears to be little need to use dogs for experimental purposes.

"I once heard a defence research official say there is less and less need to use animals for research purposes," he said.

The Fuel They Called Black Diamonds

WHEN I WAS A BOY IN Nanaimo, the little pit ponies grazed away their retirement in a Protection Island meadow, but the blackfaced miners still worked their shifts in the labyrinths deep under.

They were good, tough men whose voices remembered England and Scotland and Wales. They washed the coal dust from their throats in Nanaimo's multitudinous beer parlors. They brought a quarter's worth of fish and chips home to their families for a bountiful Saturday night treat. The Big Strike was no more than an unhappy memory.

In Nanaimo and Ladysmith, Cumberland and Bevan, coal was king. The powder boss who was our next door neighbor celebrated restored prosperity by acquiring a T-Model shiny black as the coal chunks in his basement bin. If the winds of change were beginning to blow, only the pessimistic and the over-fearful paid heed.

The shift from coal to fuel oil wasn't dramatic nor did it come about overnight. But happen it did on sea and land, and it signalled the slow death of an industry. The last Vancouver Island coal mining I remember was a depression-inspired effort that brought a few dollars to a few men in the Lantzville area. By that time, the transition had been made to our present lumber-based economy.

An era doesn't vanish without trace. Though the mines are closed and the miners long gone, tokens remain.

Many of the tiny company-built houses that were home to generations of Island coal miners are still occupied. Some have been cleverly remodelled.

Others remain as they were when ships from every port loaded their bunkers with black diamonds, and when breaking big chunks into little ones for the home fires was a standard small-boy chore.

Washer Creek at Union Bay no longer runs black with coal dust, and bricks from the massive old cooking ovens have found their way into many a patio, planter and fireplace. But the slag heaps that rear their chunky pyramids within sight of the Island Highway are monuments to a time that has passed.

There are other reminders. Last week a friend showed me a collection of gear on which miners' lives and livelihoods once depended. Among the work-worn items were caps fitted with little whale oil lamps brought from the Old Country by the men who launched the Dunsmuir empire.

There were acetylene lamps of a later day — those I remember — and a draeger-man's backpack fitted with breathing apparatus for rescue missions in galleries turned lethal by fire, rockslip or the creeping black damp.

Another souvenir was a copy of a 1919 contract between Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Limited and its employees of Ladysmith-Wellington district.

Under the terms of this contract, the company was to pay the miner a base rate of $4.20 a day. Firebosses drew $4.99, timbermen and tracklayers $4.20. The highly-paid machinist rated a top of $5.44, a boy on the picking table might aspire to $1.75 for his day's work, and a mainline locomotive engineer got 52½ cents a hour.

All classifications under the contract received a per-day cost of living bonus of $1.45¼, and each married employee or single hand who supported his parents could purchase company coal once a month at $4.40 per ton. The miner paid the company 25c monthly for tool-sharpening. Axes weren't included. A miner was expected to set axe to grindstone himself.

An employee absent without permission for two or more consecutive working days in any month was liable to dismissal without notice. It was mutally agreed that "the operation of any mine shall not be suspended in event of a fatal accident occuring in such mine nor during the day of the funeral of any employee."

The union man of today would not be impressed by that contract. Still, it represented security and something mightily like prosperity to the men who accepted it.

Will coal make a comeback on Vancouver Island? I've listened while optimistic old-timers pointed to the energy crisis and to coal exports from B.C. interior fields. Sooner or later, these insist, we'll have working coal mines again.

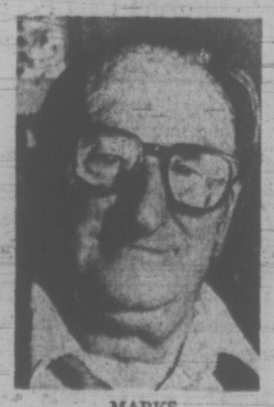
Perhaps they're right. But until such a time arrives, an industry that helped put our Island on the map is left to its memories.

Festival Postponed

The threat of rainy weather has caused a one-week postponement of Saanich's annual Strawberry Festival, originally scheduled for Sunday at Beaver Lake Park.

Included in the festival July 15 will be events honoring Ald. Les Passmore's 33 years of service to the municipality.

ROAD BLOCK FAILS TO CATCH A THIEF



MARKS

A thief with $200 in a brown paper bag averted police roadblocks in Saanich Friday night and made a clean getaway.

Harry Marks, the manager of the Elk Lake Market, 5450 Pat Bay Highway, was alone in the store at 8:30 p.m. Friday when a young man walked in and demanded all the money in the till.

"He wanted the money put in a brown paper bag so I did what he wanted and then he left," Marks said.

Marks said it was the first time the small store had been robbed.

Tonic for Ailing U.S. Dollar Could Be Cooling of Economy

By HOBART ROWEN
Financial Editor
Washington Post

WASHINGTON — The daily reports of the U.S. dollar weakening in foreign exchange markets are getting frighteningly monotonous. One doesn't have to be an international monetary expert to wonder — where does it all end?

According to economists and money men here and abroad, the dollar has become weaker than it ought to be. That is, looking at the economic performance of the United States, and comparing it to the levels of activity elsewhere, the conclusion is that speculation against the dollar has been overdone. Largely for psychological reasons. The dollar, simply, has become too cheap.

The main worry, of course, relates to the Watergate scandal. It is not, as John Palmer observed in the British newspaper the Guardian the other day, "that the currency dealers are worried about who bugged whom, but that the scandal has literally paralyzed the U.S. government at a time when it is facing a formidable resurgence of price inflation at home and major international negotiations on monetary and trade reform."

The deterioration of the dollar in the last several weeks has exceeded the most exaggerated notions of the wildest gold bugs. For example, between May 7 and the end of June, the D-mark appreciated by 17.72 per cent against the dollar — and that was after the second devaluation.

According to Dr. Otmar Emminger of the German Central Bank, in a little more than three years the D-mark has been revalued 55 per cent against the dollar, most of the shift coming in the last four months.

Against all of the major currencies, on a weighted basis adjusted for concentrations of trade, the dollar has dropped somewhere between 25 to 30 per cent since the Smithsonian agreement in December, 1971.

The dollar slide is beginning to create a sense of near-panic among Europeans. A cheap dollar gives the United States a big advantage against European exports. Moreover, it makes it attractive for European manufacturers to build plants in the U.S., as one way of maintaining a competitive edge. That spells a loss of jobs — and when enough people lose jobs, politicians may lose their own.

That's why you're reading statements like French President Georges Pompidou's that Europe must defend itself against "the pernicious sickness represented by a monetary crisis."

The staggering depreciation of the dollar seems to trigger a vicious cycle. For example, it has tobogganed so far that Europeans and Japan are trying to buy all of the soybeans and steel scrap they can at bargain dollar prices.

But to protect the domestic supply, the United States put on export controls. That limits American ability to improve the trade balance. And everybody agrees that there will be no renewed confidence in the dollar while the balance of payments is badly out of whack.

Meanwhile, inflation runs at a merry pace as the Nixon administration tries to dig itself and the country out of the mess it triggered by the rash abandonment last January of Phase two wage-price controls.

Co-incident with planning for a new Phase Four the Federal Reserve Board has been trying to puncture the boom by tightening the monetary screws, running the discount rate up to 7 per cent, triggering an 8 per cent prime lending rate at banks.

The U.S. economy is already slowing down from the fantastic first-quarter level, and the tight money dose applied by the federal reserve medicine men will probably hasten the onset of a recession. In fact, and strange as it may seem, the U.S. government will find itself happy to announce some statistics soon that will show real economic growth receding. Unemployment will stay high or increase.

This bad news will probably provide a perverse tonic for the dollar, and even for the stock market. For it will imply that the super-heated demand in the economy is cooling down, and with a more relaxed pace, prices should begin to advance more slowly. Thus, the second half should record a better performance than the recent 7 per cent increase in the consumer price index and the 20 per cent increase in the wholesale price index for the first six months of the year.

The extraordinary instability of currency relationships doesn't bode well for an early agreement on a modernized international monetary system. The 5.5 per cent revaluation of the German mark last week, while advertised as a last-ditch effort to keep alive hopes for a common European currency, reflects more than anything else the continued weakness of the dollar. No one would bet that the mark and perhaps the Swiss franc will not be revalued again.

Europeans, when you talk monetary reform to them, want resumption of dollar convertibility. (They are mindful that because of the new export rules, dollars are not convertible into certain commodities like soybeans, to say nothing of gold).

But convertibility is a far-out dream in a world where the U.S. deficit, piling up yet more dollars abroad, runs merrily along. The end of the Vietnam war is a plus in the long-term outlook, but that's offset by the grim dollar requirements for Middle East oil.

Perhaps the only realistic prospect is for achieving merely cosmetic progress at the big IMF annual meeting coming up this fall in Nairobi, Kenya, while concentrating on general guidelines for the so-called "transitional float" now in effect. Rules for intervention could be spelled out, giving the financial world some assurance that the float will be managed well while the tougher problems of convertibility and consolidation of debt are worked on.

New Computer Is Even Paranoid

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. (AP) — A scientist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) commands a computer to use a mechanical arm to lift a large red block from among a jumble of blocks on a table.

The computer correctly recognizes that a smaller green block atop the red block must be moved first.

A wheeled robot with a television camera head trundles about a suite of rooms at the Stanford Research Institute in Menlo Park, Calif. Its computer brain determines that it is first necessary to pass through a door before attempting a tack in the next room.

At Stanford University's artificial intelligence laboratory in nearby Palo Alto, a computer has been programmed to simulate the symptoms of a person mentally ill with paranoia. Psychiatrists say the machine is as convincing a paranoid as a real patient.

Through small developments such as these, scientists at a dozen or so laboratories in the United States, Japan, Britain and the Soviet Union are investigating how to mimic with machines the cognitive powers of man.

Their purpose is to create an artificial intelligence through use of a computer capable of independent reasoning.

The goal is not easy; so far thinking machines are crudely designed.

But they go beyond the lightning calculations of the storage and retrieval of data —functions that have come to mark the use of the computer since it emerged 20 years ago.

Their potential use has some scientists worried: computers that mimic man's reasoning powers not only could help eliminate routine, boring labor but also extend the tentacles of a totalitarian state.

Techniques in laboratories vary. In general, a computer is first given basic instructions about problem-solving. These include recalling solutions to past problems and applying this knowledge to future problems. Then the computer is given substantial information about its environment.

In the MIT block world, the computer was told in detail about blocks—their size, color, shape and how they differ in handling characteristics. A cube, for example, can't be stacked on a pyramid.

The computer next was given an English vocabulary so it could understand simple typed commands. Then came instructions about how to execute a command—what to do first, second and so on when given commands such as: "Pick up the large red block."

As scientists become more sophisticated in devising problem solving techniques and utilizing them with computers, they foresee vast potential for artificial intelligence.

MACHINES MAY TALK

The earliest applications probably will be in assembly line situations boring to people but which nevertheless require the ability to reason. Mechanical arms such as those at MIT and Stanford could assemble components or make quality control checks.

Development of a computer that understands spoken words and simulates speech—two areas now under intensive study—could make the computer accessible to millions of people.

Pilots approaching an airport could request weather information and receive a reply from a computer assistant at the control tower. Patients could relate their symptoms to a computer, which then would assess them for the doctor.

More distant is a machine that would deal in knowledge and ideas, arranging, assessing and culling vast amounts of information before advising its human master about a forthcoming decision.

On one hand the rudimentary successes in the laboratory suggest an idyllic society in which sophisticated machines extend each person's potential awareness of all available knowledge.

On the other hand looms the potential for a technological hell of Orwellian proportions in which advanced computers are powerful tools used to subvert society.

This probably worries some scientists.

A bank of speech-recognition computers, for example, could monitor millions of telephones, signalling a human attendant to pay special attention to telephones where forbidden words were overheard.

Joseph Weizenbaum, an MIT computer scientist, announced last year he would not work on speech recognition and would urge his colleagues and students to follow suit. But speech recognition work continues and Edward Fredkin, another MIT scientist, said that a boycott isn't the solution.

"The major problem in this field is that whatever it is someone would like not to happen gets easier all the time," he said.

"There is no way to prevent the development of more intelligent machines other than a total disavowal of technology.

"So, if we can't abandon it, we'd best pursue it intelligently with the interests of mankind at heart as opposed to any narrower interests."

WANTS OPEN RESEARCH

The largest U.S. supporter of artificial intelligence research is the defence department's advanced projects agency. The agency provided about $7 million in fiscal 1973, about half the estimated $15 million spent on various types of artificial intelligence work in the U.S.

Marvin Minsky, an MIT scientist, is concerned that the possibility exists for secret, artificial intelligence research and said such a potential is far more dangerous than open research carried on by the government. Controls that assure secret research is never undertaken are the only guarantee that the field is not used in a way that undermines freedom, he said.

If the potential exists for machines to become more intelligent than humans, might they someday seize control, a theme well developed by science fiction writers?

Nonsense, said Fredkin. "How does one conceive of a machine wanting to take over? Machines don't have unity or purpose and we can use them to develop the very techniques that allow for their control."

BCFP Plans Third Mill

British Columbia Forest Products has announced plans for a third sawmill at Mackenzie, B.C., to cost $10 million.

Ian Barclay, BCFP president, said construction will start immediately on a small-log mill with a capacity of 90 million board feet annually of random length lumber.

Two sawmills have already been constructed there by the company at a combined cost of $118 million.

The new mill is scheduled for completion in mid-1974 and will employ 130 plus an additional 100 men in logging operations.

The earlier two mills employ 400 inside and 230 in woods operations.

The company also has a pulp mill at Mackenzie employing 250. Wood chips from the new sawmill will go to the pulp mill which has been in operation since December and is averaging just under its rated capacity of 500 tons per day.

Work Week Sliced

EDMONTON (CP) — The Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers' Union and Gulf Oil Canada Ltd. have reached tentative agreement on a new 31-month contract for 1,000 employees which would shorten the work week while maintaining the eight-hour day.

The proposed contract, to be effective July 1, would shorten the work week to 37.3 hours from 40, but the employee's gain in hours would be reflected in 17 additional days off per year.

The proposals, subject to ratification by about nine Gulf locals across the country, would also form the basis of contracts with OCAW members who work for other major oil companies, Neil Reimer, the union's national director, said.

BERT GIVES IT TO 'EM STRAIGHT

COLCHESTER, England (UPI) — Bert Goodchild spent 20 years planning his retirement speech and when the big day came this week he made the most of it.

"This is the happiest day of my life," the 65-year-old Goodchild told office workers gathered to present him a gold watch marking his 25 years of service, "because I won't have to come here again.

"I want no memories of this place. I've had enough. Conditions where I worked are disgraceful and I'm glad to be leaving."

'Lavender Panthers' Hit Back

SAN FRANCISCO (Reuter) — In Miami they call themselves the "Lavender Raiders." In Seattle they are the "Lavender Patrol." Here in San Francisco the gay vigilantes prefer the name "Lavender Panthers."

Across the United States gay militants are becoming incensed by the increasing number of mob attacks by youths on homosexuals and gay bars.

Furthermore, gay leaders accuse the police of generally ignoring their complaints of violence—and even, in many cases, of tacitly encouraging such attacks.

So they have begun their own armed street patrols, determined to wreak violent revenge against the "rat packs."

Formation of the Lavender Panthers by the Gay Alliance of San Francisco is especially significant because the California city is regarded as the gay mecca of the U.S. with 80,000 members of gay groups and scores of gay bars.

APPEARS ARMED

Gay Alliance spokesman, Rev. Ray Broshears, held a news conference with a shotgun in his hand this week. He was flanked by two of his lipsticked and rouged troops, also armed.

"We are urging all homosexuals in San Francisco to arm themselves in their homes and place of business," said Broshears.

"The police look the other way when we're attacked. Even when the attackers are caught, the police tell them: 'say that a queer made an advance towards you and we'll turn you loose.'"

"So we have no choice but to defend ourselves. But I sincerely hope that violence will never be needed."

Lavender Panthers will wear silk uniform shirts with panther emblems on the back and red and lavender armbands.

They will be armed with two-foot-long sawn-off pool cues, heavy enough to cause nasty bumps on a person's head.

Laporte Linked To Que. Mafia

Times News Services

QUEBEC—The resignation of Justice Minister Jerome Choquette was demanded in the national assembly Friday as charges and counter-charges concerning links between organized crime and provincial politicians continued to fly.

The name of slain labor minister Pierre Laporte, killed by terrorists during the October Crisis of 1970 was also brought up again by Parti Quebecois House leader Robert Burns.

A front-page story in a Montreal newspaper Friday also claimed that Lapojte had dealings with members of the Montreal underworld.

His widow, through an associated, angrily denied the claims while Premier Bourassa admitted hearing the "rumors" but said he discussed them because he had no proof.

Bourassa also rejected a Parti Quebecois call to have a legislature committee inquire into the affair.

He said no proof had been brought by the party to justify such an inquiry and the Liberals had already set up a police commission inquiry into organized crime.

He also blasted Burns for calling for the resignation of Choquette.

The premier said Burns has been unable to show proof of misconduct on Choquette's part.

At the time the premier was talking to reporters, Choquette, speaking on a bill in the house, broke down in tears.

He was led into the Speaker's chambers and returned to the house within 10 minutes to all-party applause.

OYSTER MEN GET GRANTS

A Victoria oyster-producing company has been awarded a $20,000 contract from the federal and provincial governments to recommend ways of increasing the productivity of British Columbia's oyster industry.

A second $20,000 contract will go to a Ucluelet company to determine the extent and distribution of shrimp resources in B.C.

The two contracts were announced Friday by Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford. Each contract is to be financed 75 per cent by the federal government and 25 per cent by the provincial government.

The Victoria company is Gulf of Georgia Oyster Producers Ltd., a co-operative organization of the principal oyster producers in B.C. The company has retained the services of Jack Bromley, who will make recommendations dealing with production techniques, development and introduction of new products, quality control procedures, marketing practices and general management.

Radford said the company is expected to make "determined efforts to expand existing markets for B.C. oysters and oyster products, and to locate new market outlets both in Canada and other countries, primarily the United States."

The second contract, awarded to Guthrie Fishing Co. Ltd. of Ucluelet, is to attepmt to "assure the future prospects for commercial shrimp fishing operations."

The company will use the trawler, Willow Point, for an 11-week project, tabulating data and collecting information on the B.C. shrimp resource.

AN INTRODUCTION TO FOSTERING

An Introduction to Fostering program will be given Tuesday at 8 p.m. at the Junction Centre Building, 1627 Fort, in hope of filling an urgent need for foster homes.

The program is sponsored by the capital region of the human resources department, and will be held in its offices, formerly the Family and Children's Service.

Foster parents are being sought for toddlers, family groups of two or more children, and children with special needs.

Westcoast Wins Bid

OTTAWA (CP) — The National Energy Board Friday approved an application by Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. of Vancouver to add 15 loops totalling 86.4 miles to its natural gas pipeline through British Columbia.

The project, to be completed by Jan. 15, 1974, will cost an estimated $35.3 million and will give the company the increased capacity it says it needs to meet growing supply demands.

The Westcoast pipeline carries natural gas from northern B.C., Alberta, the Yukon and Northwest Territories to customers in British Columbia and the United States.

It links with the El Paso Natural Gas Co. at the international border between B.C. and the state of Washington.

The 15 loops all will be built within B.C.

The Westcoast application, made in January, said the company expects a 1974 demand increase, mainly from B.C. customers, of 10.1 billion cubic feet, or 77.3 million more cubic feet daily, than in 1973.

"The board agrees . . . these forecasts are reasonable."

It also was satisfied the company has adequate reserves to utilize the new facilities.

The application, heard in Vancouver in March, was opposed by several companies and a provincial environmental group.

The board said no evidence was presented to indicate that any part of the proposed facilities.

The application, heard in Vancouver in March, was opposed by several companies and a provincial environmental group.

The board said no evidence was presented to indicate that any part of the proposed facilities will threaten the environment.

Westcoast sales totalled 366.9 billion cubic feet in 1972, including exports of 255.5 billion, and are estimated at 482.5 billion and 280.5 billion respectively for 1973.

The domestic sales total was 111.4 billion in 1972 and is expected to be 112 billion in 1973 and 125.3 billion in 1974.

New Terms Offered

VANCOUVER (CP) — Edwin Phillips, president of Westcoast Transmission Co. Ltd. said Friday his company is willing to let gas utilities such as B.C. Hydro and Inland Natural Gas buy their own gas direct from producers, and to transport it for them.

He made the offer at the B.C. Energy Commission's public inquiry into the natural gas industry.

Phillips was answering questions by Commissioner Andrew Thompson on Westcoast's bargaining position.

The commissioner noted the "favored nations" clause in gas purchase contracts which provides, in certain circumstances, that a higher price paid to one producer must be extended to other producers in the same field. He asked whether this made bargaining difficult with the U.S. export customer, El Paso Natural Gas Co.

"I would have to acknowledge that the favored nations clause is the greatest deterrent to development," said Phillips.

TALKS FIELDED

Premier Barrett is tentatively scheduled to visit eight Japanese cities between next April 5 and 19 as part of a rugby tour.

However, the premier said Friday it is possible he will include in his visit talks with Japanese business. Barrett met representatives of the Nippon Kokan and Kobe Steel companies of Japan in June here.

Japanese news sources reported recently they expect Barrett to follow up on these talks in a visit to Tokyo next April.

He said the April dates remain tentative and could change if the spring session of the legislature makes this necessary.

FROTHING BEER SALES PLEASE ECM

BRUSSELS (AP) — The world is drinking five per cent more beer every year and the Common Market says it means to go on subsidizing the manufacture of malt to get its share of the business. The growth in beer drinking calls for an additional 400,000 tons of malt annually, the executive commission said, and production capacity in the nine countries cannot meet both home demand and opportunities for export.

Jan, Billie Jean Singles Champs

From AP

LONDON — Jan Kodes of Czechoslovakia and Billie Jean King of the United States today carried off the men's and women's singles titles in the Wimbledon tennis championships.

In the first final ever played between two East Europeans, Kodes defeated Alex Metreveli of Russia 6-1, 9-8, 6-3.

Earlier, Mrs. King, the defending champion from Long Beach, Calif., downed young Chris Evert of Fort Lauderdale, Fla., 6-0, 7-5 in the women's final.

Jimmy Connors of Belleville, Ill., and Romania's Ilie Nastase teamed to win the men's doubles title 3-6, 6-3, 6-4, 8-9, 6-1 against Australians John Cooper and Neale Fraser.

Kodes was only the second Czech to ever win a Wimbledon men's singles title. In 1954 Jaroslav Drobny, playing under Egyptian colors after exiling himself from his homeland, beat Ken Rosewall of Australia for the men's championship.

Miss Evert, after a disastrous first set in which she won only six points on Mrs. King's service, looked completely demoralized as she dropped her first service in the second set.

Billie Jean then took a 3-1 lead before Chris' game came together. She broke Mrs. King in the sixth game to tie the set at 3-3, then held her own service to take a 4-3 advantage.

Each player held service until Billie Jean broke Chris in the 11th game to move ahead 6-5.

She then served for and won the set 7-5 to claim the title—her fifth Wimbledon crown.

The five titles gave Mrs. King, 29, a post-war record. She previously won at Wimbledon in 1966, 1967, 1968 and 1972.

A crowd of 16,000 saw the one-sided final on Wimbledon's famed centre court. Hundreds of fans had slept out all night on sidewalks outside the All England Club.

The 18-year-old Miss Evert, who had reached the peak of her career in conquering favored Margaret Court of Australia in the semi-finals, was not herself when the match started. She looked nervous and inhibited, committing a stream of forehand errors and lost game after game.

The first set lasted only 17 minutes. The match itself had been scheduled for Friday, but was postponed by rain.

In the third and fourth games Billie Jean won three separate points with shots that teetered on the net cord and dropped over.

Mrs. King, who also won last year's U.S. women's singles title at Forest Hills, N.Y., played every stroke as if her life depended on it. She put away smashes and volleys with ruthless effort, and Chris helped Billie Jean's cause by hitting up nervous, half-hearted lobs.

The centre court had a bomb hoax shortly before the start of the women's final.

A section of the grandstand was evacuated 30 minutes before the start when someone telephoned the club and claimed a bomb had been planted on the court and was set to go off at 12:30 p.m., the starting time for the match.

Police made a search and found only a bag of sandwiches hidden under a sheet.

Mrs. King won first prize of $7,500 and Miss Evert $5,000.

By winning again Mrs. King topped the post-war record of Louise Brough of the U.S., who won the Wimbledon title four times between 1948 and 1955.

She still falls short of old-time champions like Helen Wills Moody, who won eight Wimbledon titles, and Suzanne Lenglen who won six.

Jubilant Billie Jean displays trophy

'Quiet' Leader Blasts Astros

By The Associated Press

Catcher John Boccabella, according to Montreal Expos manager Gene Mauch, "exerts a quiet kind of leadership over our pitching staff."

His dominance of Houston's pitching staff, though, was totally unsettling Friday night.

Boccabella became the 18th man in the history of major league baseball to hit two home runs in one inning when the Expos blasted Houston Astros for eight runs. He led off the sixth with a drive over the left field fence at Jarry Park, then hit an opposite-field grand slam to highlight the outburst as Montreal belted the Astros 12-8. They made it a doubleheader sweep with a 14-6 victory in the second game.

Mauch, however, was unfazed.

"I know he's capable of doing that, so I'm not the least surprised when he does it. It's nice, but not totally unexpected," Mauch said.

"He's a very stoic individual. He leads a quiet life and nothing is going to change it. He exerts a quiet kind of leadership over our pitching staff that isn't very visible, but you know it's there."

Elsewhere in the National League, Atlanta Braves blanked New York Mets 2-0, Cincinnati Reds defeated Philadelphia Phillies 8-2, Chicago Cubs beat San Diego Padres 8-5, Los Angeles Dodgers edged Pittsburgh Pirates 3-2 and St. Louis Cardinals trimmed San Francisco Giants 3-2.

A MODEST MAN

Boccabella, as Mauch had predicted, was modest about his accomplishments — especially the grand slam.

"They were both fastballs," Boccabella said. "The first was inside and I pulled it out. The second was right over the middle. But the reason it went over the right field fence was that I swung late on the darn thing."

"I'm more confident and relaxed out there, and that's the greatest feeling in the world—knowing you'll play day after day and knowing you can do the job."

Atlanta's Ron Schueler held the Mets hitless until the ninth inning in posting his first major league shutout, allowing singles by Ron Hodges and Felix Millan to ruin the no-hit bid. Before the inning, he had allowed only one baserunner — Hodges — on a third-inning walk.

"I knew about the no-hitter around the fifth, and I hoped for a while I could do it. I was getting a bit tired, but when you have one going, you try to keep going," the happy Schueler said later.

"Nobody on the bench said a word or even smiled during the last three innings."

So the smiles were reserved for after the game, when the shutout had been clinched.

"This was my first in the majors," Schueler said. "I'll settle for that right now."

Home runs by Bobby Tolan, Tony Perez and Bill Plummer powered the Reds over the Phillies. Tolan added an RBI single to aid the Reds' cause and help Fred Norman, 6-8, pick up his fifth victory in his last six decisions.

A two-out double by Jose Cruz in the seventh inning drove in Joe Torre and Ted Simmons to carry St. Louis to victory. Bob Gibson pitched a seven-hitter for his 233rd career triumph.

RIDLEY COASTS TO HENLEY FINAL

HENLEY-ON-THAMES (CP) — Ridley College of St. Catharines, Ont., easily won the semi-final race today for the Princess Elizabeth Challenge Cup at the Royal Henley regatta.

The loser, T. C. Williams High School of Alexandria, Va., suffered a broken oar blade at the start of the race, allowing Ridley to take an immediate lead. The Canadian crew stroked at a relaxed pace to finish the 2,310-yard course in a time of 6:56 minutes.

The easy victory left the eight Ridley oarsmen energetic and eager for the final race later in the afternoon when they faced St. Paul's School of Concord, Mass.

Crews from Princeton, N.J., and Harvard moved into finals today.

A Princeton eight won its Thames Challenge Cup semi-final for lightweights with a comfortable victory over an Irish crew, Garda Siochana.

The Harvard University junior varsity crew had a much tougher battle in the Ladies' Challenge Plate for heavyweights against a University of Wisconsin crew, winning by three-quarters of a length.

England's Mike Hart and Chris Baillieu today beat Swiss champions Ueli Isler and Hans Ruckstuhl in the final of the Doubles Sculls Challenge Cup by 4½ lengths in 7:11.

Hockey: The Juniors Make Bid for Control

One week's work, or speaking of mergers the loudest and perhaps the most telling shot in the continuing hockey war may be fired his month.

Because hearken to this:

Now the three major junior hockey leagues in the country have gotten together, formed a solid front, and it is this group which hopefully will dictate the terms of future amateur drafts, the money involved, and the availability of players to the National Hockey League, the World Hockey Association and yes, even to the revered Canadian Amateur Hockey Association.

It's a seller's market, and the junior leagues want in at the ground level; and as the sole possessors of that much sought-after commodity, those talented juniors, the merger makes a lot of sense, and possibly could produce an agreement which would be acceptable to all. Besides, just why shouldn't people who operate junior teams have a right to say what they want? And get it?

Or as Eric Bishop, general manager of the Victoria Cougars so succinctly put it:

"Why should we put all our money into developing junior players and get little or nothing out of it? Why should we get only $10,000 (under the old agreement with the NHL) for a Lanny McDonald or a Tom Lysiak, when a player's agent can get $40,000 for just a few hours work?"

'We Must Work With Both'

Right now there is no agreement between the junior clubs and the NHL or the WHA, and the offer by the WHA for a flat development sum of $60,000 per team in the WCHL has been shelved because it is felt it just wouldn't work and besides, the WCHL believes it has a better plan for both the NHL and the WHA.

"We know we must work with both leagues," said Bishop.

"The plan was conceived by the Western Canada League," Bishop revealed. "We took the bull by the horns, and I'm sure something along this line will work. There is a meeting later this month."

The main point under the proposal is that junior clubs are prepared to work with the pros, would like some form of a comparable draft of graduating players, and are against youngsters of pre-draft age being signed to professional contracts.

Complete details are not available, but under the plan there would be something akin to a sliding scale of payments for draftees. For instance, the first 20 players drafted would go for X dollars, the second 20 for a lesser amount, and so on down the scale. A first-round choice might be worth upwards of $30,000 to the developing club, and that money would be paid by the major-league team signing the player, whether it be the WHA or the NHL. The sum would be paid immediately, too.

These monies would finally be pooled under an arrangement to be worked out. The junior "A" clubs would first meet their own committments, and then the CAHA would get their share of the pot. After all, the CAHA is the parent body and needs the money for other minor divisions, but the junior clubs want first call, period, and no pittance either.

Masters of Their Destiny

"We want to control our own destiny," Bishop explained. "We have a lot of money invested, and we have to protect it. In this way we can."

If this is the junior's answer to the pros, and the CAHA, it is quite conceivable they are in the driver's seat.

Call it a form of a merger at a minor level, or call it putting a gun to the heads to the pros, it still will only work if both professional leagues, the NHL and the WHA, go along with the plan.

Will they?

"There's no doubt the NHL and the WHA know what we are doing," said Bishop.

"There are representatives of both leagues in our own organization. And quite frankly, I would think the NHL and the WHA would be relieved if we can come up with a workable plan."

So this may be an answer, or a part of it.

At least the juniors are firm enough. So is Bishop. Because to him it's a business.

"To bring along a goalkeeper like Danny Rogers, have him drafted, and then get only $10,000 for a kid like that is crazy," he said.

The argument is convincing. Now all that remains is for the NHL and WHA to agree.

Dave's Toe Big Weapon In Triumph by Eskimos

EDMONTON (CP) — An electrifying 99-yard interception return by Larry Highbaugh Friday provided the impact and Dave Cutler's talented toe generated the most effect as Edmonton Eskimos stopped Montreal Alouettes, 25-14.

The Canadian Football League exhibition was played before 19,662 fans, the largest ever to watch an exhibition game at Clarke Stadium.

Highbaugh stepped in front of an intended receiver on the 11-yard-line and dashed along the sideline past at least four would-be tacklers to the end zone on the last play of the third quarter.

His burst broke up what had been a kicker's duel between Cutler and Don Sweet of the Alouettes. Cutler wound up with four field goals in six attempts and converted Highbaugh's touchdown.

Sweet connected on both his field goal attempts and converted Montreal's only touchdown, scored by flanker Brian Baima in the final minute of the game on a 37-yard toss from Jimmy Jones.

Sonny Wade, Montreal's other quarterback, lofted a 66-yard single in the fourth quarter for the other Alouette point.

Jones and Edmonton starter Tom Wilkinson were the only quarterbacks to generate touchdowns. Wilkinson's came on a seven-yard toss to rookie Canadian Tom Chown with less than three minutes remaining.

It was Edmonton's first appearance of the season and Montreal's first loss in two starts. The Als defeated Saskatchewan Roughriders, 24-10, Tuesday in their first exhibition start.

Rookie Holds Lead

WINNIPEG (CP) — Gar Hamilton of Toronto had one stroke cut off his lead Friday but still goes into today's final 18 holes of the Manitoba Open Golf championship with a one-shot margin.

The 23-year-old tour rookie shot a par 72 Friday for a 36-hole total of 140, two under par. One stroke back are veteran Moe Norman of Gilford, Ont., a three-time winner of the event, and Bill Tape of Kitchener. Norman and Tape both shot a one-under-par 71 on the 6592-yard Niakwa Country Club course.

Hamilton had nines of 37-35, "missing a lot of eight-foot putts" along the way.

Norman went out at 34 to move ahead of Hamilton after 27 holes, but slipped on the back nine, finishing it with a 37. Tape was the leader after 27 holes. He was five under par at that point but slipped to a 38 on the back nine.

National Hockey League star Dale Tallon was alone at 142, with Bob Cox of Richmond, another stroke back at 143. Gary Pitchford of Toronto had the best round of the day, a three-under-par 69 that left him at 145, the same score as Ken Richardson of Claremont, Ont.

CHAMPS TOPPLE COSMOS

Esquimalt-Victoria nipped Cosmopolitan 5-4 at Bullen Park Friday in the second game of the Victoria Babe Ruth (14-15-year-olds) all-star baseball tournament.

Ron Hope hit a bunt single in the seventh inning to score Ron Arcuri with the winning run.

It was the second win in two nights for Esquimalt-Victoria, the defending champion.

The tournament was to continue today with a game at 6 at Bullen Park between Saanich Evening Optimists and Cosmopolitan.

Rain Limits Cricket Play

LEEDS, England (Reuter) — Rain restricted play to only two hours Friday on the Second day of the third and final cricket Test with England 70 for one after dismissing New Zealand for 276 in their first innings.

New Zealand, needing to win this test to square the three-match series, resumed at 262 for nine and Dayle Hadlee and Hedley Howarth took their last wicket stand to 43 before Hadlee had his off-stump uprooted by fast bowler John Snow.

SPEEDWAY PROGRAM RAINED OUT

The National Association of Stock Car Auto Racing (NASCAR) event was to have been the first half of the $20,000 Canadian part of the series. The second part is slated for Westwood Speedway in Burnaby Sunday.

Western Speedway officials said the event will probably be rescheduled for some time in September.

Aldridge Spoils Polz' No-Hit Bid

Bill Polz hurled a one-hitter Friday night at Central Park and for a long time it looked like being a no-hitter.

Polz struck out 11 batters — eight in the first three innings — and gave up three walks as leaders Century Inn blanked Labatts 4-0 in a Stuffy McGinnis Men's Softball League game. He got fine support from his teammates, who made no errors.

The bid for a no-hitter ended in the fifth inning when Keith Aldridge cracked a lead-off single.

Century Inn batting was led by Bob Custance, who hit three singles and batted in two runs.

PAMELA FAILS TO FIND SUPPORT IN THE COURT

PITTSBURGH (AP) — Saying he doubts the United States constitution applies to girls wanting to play baseball, Federal Judge Barron P. McCune has upheld the suburban Avonworth Baseball Association's refusal to permit Pamela Magill to play ball with the boys.

"I have serious doubts that the Fifth and 14th amendments apply to situations of this kind," said McCune in his ruling on a suit filed by the 10-year-old girl's parents.

"I doubt if there's any unconstitutional discrimination in this instance or discrimination of any kind, for that matter," the judge said.

McCune said he based his ruling on the fact that baseball is to a large degree a contact sport and that other legal precedents had guaranteed women equal rights only in non-contact sports such as skiing, tennis and golf.

Ladies Set Record With PNGA Entries

There are only two former champions listed among contenders for the men's and women's titles in the annual Pacific Northwest Golf Association championships, which start Monday at the Uplands and Victoria Golf Club courses.

Distaff golfers, who have set a PNGA record with their number of entries, will invade the Oak Bay links for Monday and Tuesday's qualifying rounds, while the men will match their talents against the lush fairways and greens of the par-70 Uplands layout.

All competitors will be placed into flights following the 36-hole qualifying rounds, with match-play losers in the first round Wednesday dropping into lower flights. Finals are set for Saturday.

Still rated as a threat to grab a third crown is George Holland, a 46-year-old veteran from Bellevue, Wash., who chalked up his first PNGA triumph 15 years ago and collected his second title in 1965. He's the only former men's champion entered.

Another two-time winner is Judy Hoetmer of Seattle, the only former champion in the women's field, who took the title in the last two tournaments held in Victoria — in 1966 and 1960.

The men's field includes 23 golfers with handicaps of less than three, even without the mainland's low handicappers.

Duke DeBernardi of Roseburg, Ore., John Hegland of Lake Oswego, Ore., Mike Stohl of Portland and Bob Zimmerman of Marysville, Wash., are scratch golfers in the men's field of 159. As well, there are five golfers with handicaps of one, 14 two-handicappers and 38 others with handicaps below six.

Among the one-handicappers are Dave Mick of Gorge Vale, Bob Hunt of Uplands and Bob Beauchemin of Gorge Vale, and listed among the two-handicappers are Mike Pyke of Glen Meadows, Ken Floyd of Royal Colwood and Mike Gray of Uplands.

Mary Dudke of Dayton, Ore., should pose the biggest threat to Miss Hoetmer but there are several others in the record women's field of 160 who must rate, including Dale Shaw of Glen Meadows and Marilyn Palmer of Vancouver.

DAVE STOCKTON
. . . only 27 putts

Stockton Will Let 'Other Guys' Fret

MILWAUKEE (AP) — Dave Stockton, relaxed but exuberant after the best round of his career, was asked to predict a winning score in the $130,000 Greater Milwaukee Open golf tournament.

"I think I can shoot some pretty good scores," Stockton said. "I'll let the other guys worry about it. I've been chasing people all year. Now they can chase me for a while."

Stockton fashioned a nine-under-par 63—just one stroke off the best round of the season on the pro tour—and established a three-stroke lead Friday with a 36-hole total of 132.

That's 12 under par for two trips over the 7,010 yard Tuckaway Country Club course. And the 32-year-old Stockton had a mild warning for the rest of the field going into the last half of this chase for a $26,000 first prize.

"I don't generally back off," he said.

Stockton, who has picked up five titles in his nine years on the tour, held a commanding lead over Larry Ziegler, alone in second with a 69 for 135.

Bob Goalby, who held the first-round lead, had six birdies, but could do no better than a 71. He drifted back to third at 136.

Mike Morley was next with a 71-137, while Homero Blancas and Hubert Green were tied at 138. Blancas had a 71 and Green a 70.

Wilf Homenuik of Winnipeg was best among three Canadians who qualified for the final 36 holes. Homenuik shot 73 for a 141 total; George Knudson of Toronto had 71 for 142; and Ben Kern, also of Toronto, fired a 70 for a 143 total.

"It's a good feeling," Stockton said. "I really had it going."

Stockton has a reputation as one of the game's best scramblers, but this time he didn't have to resort to his specialty.

He missed four fairways—but he didn't miss a green and didn't make a bogey. And he needed only 27 putts.

He played the back nine first and romped over that side in six-under-par 30, his best nine holes as a pro.

Soccer Boys Working To Raise Tour Funds

Four young men from Victoria will play for the B.C. soccer team next month in the Canada Summer Games in Burnaby.

Six others from the city could have played, too, but they declined the invitation to join the Games squad.

They'll be out of the province at the time, taking part in what they hope will be an even greater soccer experience.

The six — John McGuire, Waining Lee, Jim Allen, Steve Forslund, Garnet Moen and Gary McLaren — will be part of an 18-member Victoria Boys' Club squad making a 12-game, six-week soccer tour of Britain from July 17 to Aug. 28.

The Victoria boys will get a chance to play against many of the top young pros in Britain and be seen by English League scouts and Keith expects his six stars, and possibly more, to be offered pro contracts.

"Particularly Mc Guire, who is a Canadian youth international, should be snapped up," Kieth said in an interview Thursday. "He's the hottest thing to come out of B.C. in the five years I have been here."

And Keith should know. He's also provincial coach for Vancouver Island and one of the men responsible for chosing the under-21 Games team.

Three games in Glasgow, including a curtain-raiser against a Hamilton junior team prior to a match between Leeds United and Hamilton of the Scottish League's second division will open the Boys' Club tour.

They will also play a Manchester Select junior pro team and junior squads in Cardiff and in Eastbourne on England's south coast.

But the highlight of the whole tour will come in London where the young Victoria players will be guests of the West Ham club for a week.

Keith, who is a personal friend of West Ham's manager Ron Greenwood, says his players have been invited to join in all the London club's training sessions and to play games against the reserve side.

So far, the club has raised $8,000 of the $12,000 the tour will cost and applications for both federal and provincial grants have been turned down.

In a bid to make up part of the difference, the touring team will play a Victoria All-Star squad led by former Welsh international Brian Hughes in a special exhibition match at 8 Monday night at Royal Athletic Park. Proceeds will go to the tour.

POLICE PUSH POWER BID

VANCOUVER (CP) — Proposals of the federal law reform commission to limit police powers to question suspects would hamstring law enforcement, lead to increased crime and result in apathy on the part of policemen, delegates to the annual convention of the Canadian Police Association were told Friday.

Syd Brown of Toronto, who was appointed to draft a brief expressing the association's opposition, said the proposals favor the position of an accused person at the expense of crime victims.

He said the proposals mean that only statements made before an independent official would be admissible against an accused person in court.

"If a guy shoots a storekeeper and tells a policeman he's sorry he did it, he might deny the statement before an independent official and it couldn't be used in evidence," said Sgt. Brown.

He said the inference of the commission's proposals is that all policemen are brutal and overzealous, that their powers of interrogation are too strong and that courts seldom uphold the statements of a defendant.

Sgt. Brown suggested the law reform commission has had no direct experience with crime because the proposals do not take into consideration the victims of crime.

He said the proposals would require 24-hour attendance at police stations of independent officials and that the scheme would be unworkable.

In other business, the association approved a resolution urging that persons imprisoned for major offences or crimes of violence be required to serve at least half their sentence before becoming eligible for parole and that they be required to serve the full sentence for any similar subsequent conviction.

Delegates also voted for a resolution urging that only Canadian citizens or British subjects be hired as police officers after an Ontario police official said persons who owe allegiance to other countries can hardly be in a position to advocate and enforce the laws of Canada.

The association adopted a resolution that wiretapping and electronic surveillance be limited to persons planning criminal activity or threatening the security of the nation.

The resolution said that only recognized law enforcement agencies should be permitted to utilize such equipment and that only chiefs of police or federal and provincial police commissioners be permitted to authorize the use of wiretapping.

The resolution said that authorization of wiretapping should rest solely in the hands of elected law enforcement representatives and not the judiciary because courts should not give the impression that they are in any way connected with law enforcement.

All Pens Termed Archaic

VANCOUVER (CP) — Former provincial judge Maurice Mulligan said Friday that all Canada's federal penitentiaries are archaic and almost without exception should be torn down.

Addressing the annual convention of the Canadian Police Association in Vancouver, Mulligan said that two new maximum security institutions should be built in their place, one to serve Eastern Canada and one to serve the West.

"The rest of penitentiary inmates, perhaps 80 per cent, should never go to these places, and should in my opinion serve their time in work camps and forest camps throughout the various provinces."

Mulligan, who returned to criminal law practice after being defeated as a Conservative candidate in the last federal election, said this sytem would avoid contact between the majority of offenders and hardened criminals.

Mulligan also criticized the policies of the National Parole Board, saying they have caused a lot of dissatisfaction, not only among the public and police forces, but among prison inmates.

"In far too many cases, parole is granted too early, with little or no reason given by the board," he said. "Far too many of the parole board decisions are made in a vacuum, many on the basis of interviews with the inmates only, without reference to police reports or the opinions of the trial judge."

Mounties Win Case

BANFF, Alta. (CP) — Charges against two Canmore-based RCMP constables of assault causing bodily harm and unlawful confinement were dismissed Friday in provincial court.

Constables Kevin Fitzpatrick, 24, and Robert Swift, 26, were charged in May after Hugh Danielson, 28, of Kindersley, Sask., complained he was beaten by the two Mounties April 1 after he and a companion were stopped by a patrol car on the Trans-Canada Highway near Canmore, 10 miles southeast of Banff.

Danielson told the court June 22 he had been "smashed in the chest a couple of times" by Const. Swift when he refused to identify himself after the two officers searched a car, in which he was riding, for drugs and liquor.

He said he was roughed up by Const. Fitzpatrick for insisting upon contacting a lawyer. He then was put in the cells without being charged.

Judge G. W. Graves dismissed the charges on the grounds Danielson's evidence was fabricated as part of a personal vendetta against the force.

Building Stalled

VANCOUVER (CP) — Thirty-four specialty workmen — pneumatic control technicians — are involved in a strike and lockout that could have serious repercussions on B.C.'s construction industry.

The strike-lockout is similar to the long elevator installers' strike which saw projects completed but stand idle or partly used because they did not have elevators. (Only two workers are involved in the Victoria area).

In this case buildings could not even be completed without work by the technicians, who are responsible for installing controls for heating and ventilating systems. Their work is normally done as the building goes up.

The men are members of the Plumbers' Union, Local 170, who went on strike at Honeywell Ltd. here June 20 and were locked out five days later by four other firms who are members of a national group called the Pneumatic Control Council.

The other firms are Johnson Controls, Barber-Colman, Power Regulators and Temco Controls.

They were originally involved in national bargaining which broke down. Attempts were then made to settle issues provincially.

The workers, also known as instrument fitters or mechanics, earn $7.27 an hour but, except fo car allowances, the issues are not monetary.

Ray Callard of the plumbers' local said the dispute is basically a protest against a bid by the companies to "import fitters from other provinces. We want to protect B.C. jobs."

Callard said the union is also protesting proposals by the companies to reject workers assigned to jobs through the union's hiring plan, and to put non-union personnel from their own staffs on industrial repair and maintenance work.

He said the B.C. and Yukon Building and Construction Trades Council, representing 60,000 tradesmen of all types, has declared products of the five firms to be "hot."

Several technicians continued working on the Jericho Hill School for the Deaf and Blind here and an addition to the G. F. Strong Rehabilitation Centre without pay as a goodwill gesture. They wore On Strike signs on their hard hats.

French Furore Halts Trip

WINNIPEG (CP) — A Vancouver-bound Air Canada DC-9 with 94 passengers on board was delayed 30 minutes because 26 French-Canadian passengers refused to continue their flight without a French-speaking cabin attendant on board.

The French-speaking passengers had boarded the flight in Montreal, but the French-speaking crew was changed in Winnipeg.

When it became apparent that no member of the new cabin crew spoke French, the 26, who were bound for Calgary, demanded a French-speaking stewardess be brought aboard.

The aircraft's captain who received the demand as the aircraft was taxiing toward the runway, elected to abort the take-off and return to the terminal.

When it was discovered that no French-speaking stewardess was available, a French-speaking passenger agent joined the flight crew.

An airline spokesman said that some time ago Air Canada had given the federal government an undertaking that wherever possible, French-speaking personnel would be available at all Canadian points.

"It also stated that every effort would be made to serve passengers in their own language — English or French," the spokesman said.

However, he added, "where French is not — by any means — the language of the majority, the proportion of French-speaking employees to English-speaking employees is limited.

"We do our best, but in this instance a situation arose which was unfortunate — we're sorry it happened," he said.

BEFORE THE JUDGE

"Canada is a good land and I want to come back," William Franklin Draper Jr., of Honolulu, Hawaii, told Judge William Ostler in Victoria provincial court Friday.

Draper said he would be sure to pay his $75 fine imposed for possession of one-half ounce of marijuana.

Draper, 27, was searched by customs officers when he got off the Black Ball ferry in Victoria on Friday. Rolled up in his sleeping bag, the officers found the marijuana.

He told Ostler he was travelling to New Hampshire to visit family and friends. Ostler gave the man two months to pay the fine.

Georgina Brooks, 22, of 1006 Bay Street, was put on two years probation after she pleaded guilty to writing two bad cheques in February.

Two Victoria people were each fined $300 after they pleaded guilty to breaking the window of a Bastion Square store and taking $90 worth of jewelry from a display.

Susan Williams, 18, of 1745 Lillian, and Trevor Haddow, 21, of 534 Hillside, told the judge they had been drinking.

Sentence was suspended for Andrew Lowther, 17, of 1219 Hillside, after he pleaded guilty to possession of eight grams of hashish.

Police checked Lowther's car May 10 when it was parked behind a cemetery at Cedar Hill and Ryan and found the hashish.

Lowther was put on six months probation.

Ernest Wilfred Riggs, 47, of Vancouver, was fined $350 after he pleaded guilty to impaired driving June 27 on Store Street.

★ ★ ★

"You're a very dirty old man," Ostler told Amos Clarkin, 75, of 545 Johnson, just before sentencing him to three months in jail.

Clarkin pleaded guilty to a charge of contributing to juvenile delinquincy when he "enticed" two 13-year-old boys to his room Wednesday by promising them money.

A Victoria detective testified Clarkin asked one of the boys to leave the room and then made indecent advances towards the other "by touching his private parts."

He asked the second boy to go to bed with him, but the boy refused.

$123,000 AWARDED CRASH WIDOW

The British Columbia Supreme Court Friday awarded a Calgary widow, Colleen Olive Deaking, and her two children damages of $123,000 in connection with her husband's death in a traffic accident.

Mr. Justice Harry McKay made the award to Mrs. Deaking, whose husband, Barrie Albert Deaking, was killed in an accident in December of 1971 near Red Pass, in central B.C.

Mrs. Deaken had sued Doris Jane Krumes, wife of Otto Krumes, driver of a pick-up truck in which the two men were riding. The truck smashed head-on into a car.

Mr. Justice McKay ruled that Krumes was negligent in driving the truck.

Volcano Slumbers

REYKJAVIK, Iceland (AP) — The eruption of the volcano Helgafell is over, more than four months after it forced evacuation of the island of Heymaey, the civil defence committee of the Westman Islands said. The crater is closed and there has been no lava movement since late May, said geologist Dr. Thorbjorn Sigurgeirsson. The eruption began Feb. 23.

They Hunt Filth Merchants

By WILLIAM HELTON

SAN FRANCISCO (AP) — Lola and David Walker's plane shuddered in the strong winds that whipped down from the Oakland Hills and swept across San Francisco Bay. It was no day for flying.

But the Walkers were not flying for pleasure. Walker piloted his single-engine plane in a patrol sector defined with military precision. The Walkers were hunting polluters.

Among the targets this day were a tanker suspected of pumping bilges and a yacht harbor protruding—perhaps illegally—into the bay.

The Walkers are part of a volunteer group including pilots, boat-owners, photographers and scientists who pay $50 in annual dues. Their only benefit is that they sometimes can write off their expenses as tax deductible.

"We have people who love the sea—who love to fly, sail and scuba dive; most are willing to do a little more," says Clark Cameron, director of the Oceanic Society Observation Patrol.

FIRST OF KIND

While other areas have tried volunteer pollution detection, Cameron says the patrol is the first comprehensive and long-range effort. By year's end, he hopes to have a fleet of 200 aircraft and 100 boats —at no expense to the taxpayer. Already, he says, about 10 air patrols are flown each week.

Working closely with such governmental agencies as the Environmental Protection Agency, the United States Army Corps of Engineers and the U.S. Coast Guard, the main focus has been the 400-square-mile San Francisco Bay. But there are some patrols along the northern California coast, and there are hopes of expanding.

"The laws are on the books," he said at the headquarters in the city's Fisherman's Wharf area where he and a secretary run the patrol.

"But the various organizations simply do not have the manpower for detecting everywhere. That's our job—to act as the eyes and ears of those agencies.

"The other task is deterrence. A boater is less likely to pollute if he thinks that sailboat he sees nearby is one of ours and there is someone with a pair of binoculars aboard watching."

NAIL FEW CULPRITS

Members tell headquarters when they see a violation. Cameron then calls the appropriate agency, usually the coast guard.

The number of "kills" since the patrol began operating full-swing in March has been small, however. Walker got one when his observer spotted a tanker discharging oil into a harbor.

Pilot Louis Schmidt and observer Dick Apcar spotted a purple discharge flowing from a chemical plant. The purple plume turned out to be legal, but the coast guard found hydrofluoric acid being pumped into a nearby marshy area.

Dr. Saul Chaikin reported a discolored discharge from a fibreboard plant. The coast guard found 60,000 gallons of waste being pumped into the bay daily.

In another incident, pilot Ron Gordon spotted a marina dock extending into the ocean near Fort Bragg to the north. His photographs indicate the dock may be a navigational hazard, Cameron said.

None of these incidents has been taken to court.

"Legal action in the environmental field should generally be used as a last resort when all else has failed," said patrol lawyer Joe Forest.

PIPE DEAL WELDED

VANCOUVER (CP) — A dispute that threatened to close down the West Coast Transmission Co.'s $35 million British Columbia pipeline expansion has been settled.

The plumbers union Local 170 has again agreed to supply welders to the project being built for West Coast by Mannix Ltd. of Calgary.

The union had decided to withhold men to protest the contracting out of part of the work to a non-union company. The union said the dispute was settled when the work was shifted to a firm certified by the Teamsters.

Community School Issue Alive—Bunn

The proposed James Bay community school is not a dead issue, Greater Victoria school board chairman Peter Bunn said today.

He said city council finance committee's recommendation Thursday against participating in joint funding "does not close the door on the matter."

He declined to divulge the reason for his optimism.

He said work on expanding James Bay elementary school will have to begin as scheduled this fall in order to be completed by September, 1974, but he said the extra community facilities planned for the addition can be added when funds come through.

The finance committee decided the city can't afford the estimated $115,000 share of capital costs required for the extra facilities.

"I can see this point of view," Bunn said, "the city has a very narrow base for raising money."

The "no-action" stand recommended for the city is similar to Saanich council's decision to delay deciding on their participation in Saanich Community School until the end of this year.

The new Saanich school, to be built at Burnside and Acorn, was also scheduled for completion by September 1974 but the delay in commitment of funds will mean the building won't be opened until sometime in 1975.

"The Saanich case is a little different," Bunn said, "since the interest was generated from above while the James Bay thing is very much from the grass roots."

The chairman said the board will continue to look for funds to finance the community side of the new James Bay school.

Tourists Swallow Mohammed's Line

By HOLGER JENSEN

PETRA, Jordan (AP) — Mohammed Hamad is a 20th-century caveman.

"I work the soft stone with nails," he explains with a gold-toothed grin. "I burn it, cover it with olive oil, burn it again, bury it in sand for 15 days and sell it . . . never for less than a dinar."

Mohammed says his little figurines, oil lamps and shards of pottery bring in up to 50 dinars a month—a year's income for some of Jordan's less enterprising Bedouins. And Mohammed isn't even a good antique faker.

He carves crosses on the chests of his stone statues "to attract Christian buyers." But since the Nabateans date to the second and third centuries before Christ, such symbols make his antiques laughably phoney.

"Tourists still buy them," he shrugs. "They even believe me when I tell them I'm a descendant of the Nabateans. Of course I'm not. I'm a Bedouin. But it makes them happy to tell them so. Happy people pay more."

Occasionally Mohammed finds a genuine antique in the caves and tombs of Petra. He sells this too—against the law —after making plenty of copies. He is largely unaware of their historical value.

Aaron, brother of Moses, is said to be buried on a hilltop overlooking Petra. Moses found water here during his search for the promised land, and the nearby village of Wadi Musa is named after him.

Petra means "rock." Its Nabatean founders hacked the city out of the mountains of southwest Jordan as an impregnable fortress to dominate commercial caravan routes between Asia and Africa. By the second century BC they had grown rich on plunder, lavishing the wealth on ornate temples, tombs and three-storey cave dwellings connected by rock staircases and tiers of cliffside streets.

Petra can only be reached through a narrow three-mile-long defile in towering sandstone cliffs, a ravine of perpetual twilight known as the "siq." The Nabateans rightly figured that a handful of men could hold it against an army.

For a water supply, the Nabateans cut a rock channel from the springs of Wadi Musa to the heart of Petra. Here they held out against successive invasions that marked the breakup of the Greek empire and the beginning of Roman rule.

The Romans outfoxed the Nabateans by cutting off the aqueduct and captured Petra in 106 AD. They added more architectural embellishments to the city of rose-red rock.

But as the trade routes changed, fewer caravans passed the fortress and Petra's livelihood disappeared.

Petra remained largely inaccessible to the average tourist until the early 1960s, when Jordan's ministry of tourism realized the attraction of a city "half as old as time itself."

Now there is a government rest house at the entrance to the siq. Villagers from Wadi Musa must act as guides for tourists and rent them horses for the three-mile ride to Petra. The ravine is too narrow for automobiles and the hidden city is inaccessible to aircraft.

Report Too Rosy For Energy Team

OTTAWA (CP) — A report prepared for Dome Petroleum on natural gas reserves was termed perhaps too optimistic by the National Energy Board.

Dome, in conjunction with Dow Chemicals Ltd., wants board permission to export 139 million barrells of liquid ethane, an extract of natural gas.

The permission would pave the way for a $400-million investment by Dome and Dow in an ethyldne plant at Fort Saskatchewan, Alta., and a plant to the United States and Ontario.

Tied to the Dome-Dow hearing is an investigation by the board of whether natural gas reserves are sufficient to allow increased exports.

The report on reserves painted a rosy picture for higher amounts of natural gas to be taken from Alberta formations around Medicine Hat and Milk River.

The report also was highly optimistic about possibilities of big gas finds in the Suffield military base adjoining the Milk River and Medicine Hat fields.

Board members also noted that the consultant's report forecasting higher reserves in all three areas were based on high returns for the gas.

DIED FOR CASTE

NEW DELHI (Reuter) — The Indian caste system cost 78 lives when passengers on a stranded bus refused to haul themselves to safety along the same rope.

The Hindustan Times reports a bus carrying 86 persons was trapped by flood waters last Monday near the town of Alwar, about 100 miles southwest of Delhi.

Karim Khan, a tea-stall owner, went to the rescue. He waded out to the bus with a rope which he had tied to a truck standing on high ground.

He asked the passengers to haul themselves along the rope to safety.

But the passengers, who belonged to two different high-caste communities, refused to share the same rope and stayed in the bus.

The floodwaters rose and the bus was swept away, with the loss of 78 lives.

Deadly Frontier Tourist Trap

By HUBERT J. ERB

BRAUNLAGE, Germany (AP) — The deadly frontier between East and West Germany is becoming a tourist attraction.

As Europeans move north and south in the vacation season, hundreds of visitors take a quick detour to look at the line that physically divides a country.

Nowhere is this gathering more evident than here in the Harz Mountain region, once the green heartland of an undivided Germany, where tourism always has flourished.

Taking the mountain air is mixed with a closeup look at a Communist minefield and other barriers that stretch 850 miles from the Baltic Sea in the north to Czechoslovakia to the south.

The attraction was a black, red and gold striped post directly adjacent to the roadway. A silver emblem identified East Germany with the words "German Democratic Republic."

"The border itself often is many metres in front of the mines and other barriers the Communists have put up to prevent their people from running away," a West German border officer said.

"We put up white signs that tell vacationers exactly where it is. Their side puts up those striped poles."

On footpaths that come close to the 30-foot-wide East German minefield between two barrier fences, the West Germans put up special yellow signs that warn "Danger —Mines."

10 DAYS IN OPEN

He gave this example:

"About four weeks ago, a 22-year-old East German youth decided to try to make it across.

"We still had snow in the mountains and it was cold. He was under way for 10 days, much of the time without food. He studied what he thought was the final barrier and awaited his chance.

"It was a high fence.

"Somehow, he managed to climb it.

"Most refugees try to dig under it. He thought he was in the West, but he still had more than a mile of border barrier area with constant patrols in front of him. He wandered about aimlessly, somehow managing to escape the mines and not get caught by guards."

"He came to another fence, climbed, and collapsed exhausted. So he would not be found he covered himself with leaves, snow and dirt. He thought he was still inside East Germany, but he was a yard inside West Germany. One of our own patrols found him by almost stepping on him. He was rushed to a hospital, but he lost the lower parts of both legs because of frostbite. We found him too late."

Those casually visiting the bustling Western half of the Harz Mountains can only guess at the personal dramas taking place amid the green crests and neat fields that stretch across into the East.

CROSS FOR VICTIM

A memorial stone and cross bear the legend: "On August 1, 1963, 150 metres from here, Helmut Kleinert was shot dead before he could cross the demarcation line."

To the east, dark clouds hung about the 3,500-foot summit of the massive Brocken, the mountain that once was the centrepiece of the Harz area with its miles of trails, skiing and legends of dancing witches.

On steep slopes, the East Germans had managed only a single fence to mark the end of their domain.

For minutes on end the German dividing line, that in flat country stretches like an open wound to be seen for miles, disappeared, hidden by trees and crags, sunken into mountain streams.

The fliers had to rely on maps propped on their laps. The line they followed marked the old provincial boundary between what now is western Lower Saxony and eastern Thuringia.

It dates to the last century, resurrected as a means of establishing East-West zones of authority for occupying armies in 1945.

At the time, the line was described as temporary.

Life and Legend Abound in U.S.

By VICTOR STANTON
Kitchener-Waterloo Record

If you plan a vacation trip in the United States this summer, chances are that wherever you go you will find regularly-scheduled presentations of outdoor dramas exalting local history and legend.

Most are to be found near major scenic, historic and cultural attractions, particularly in the southern states.

Many productions are presented daily throughout late spring, summer and early fall, but some are tied in with a particular annual observance and performed only for a brief period of time. Mostly, performances are in the early evening, but some productions also offer matinee shows.

Though professional actors frequently are brought in to take leading roles, area citizens are used in most of the supporting parts and also serve in technical and promotional capacities.

The oldest of the season-long historical dramas is The Lost Colony, performed since 1937 on Roanoke Island off the coast of North Carolina.

The drama relates the story of a band of colonists who attempted to create the first British settlement on this continent in 1587 and who three years later had disappeared without a trace, a mystery never solved.

One of the best-attended pageants is Unto These Hills, a dramatic production near the community of Cherokee in western North Carolina, which traces how the Cherokee Indians were forced to leave their mountain homeland in the winter of 1838.

Descendants of the small group of Indians who were able to remain in this Smoky Mountains territory perform many of the roles in the drama.

A new production this year will be presented at Jekyll Island in Georgia. Called Drumbeats in Georgia, it will depict the successful colonization of the region in the early 1730s by a band of English settlers led by James Oglethorpe.

Other outdoor dramas recommended by the United States Travel Service include:

Cry of the Wild Ram, performed during August at Kodiak, Alaska, portrays the struggles of Alexander Baranov to forge a new Russia out of the untamed wilderness.

Cross and Sword, presented at St. Augustine, Fla., dramatizes the story of explorer-adventurer Don Pedro Menendez de Aviles who was sent by Philip II of Spain to establish a permanent colony in the New World in 1565.

The Legend of Daniel Boone at Harrodsburg, Ky., and Horn in the West at Boone, N.C., both recall the adventures of 18th-century frontiersman Boone.

The Common Glory, staged at Williamsburg, Va., focuses on the colonial period leading up to and through the American Revolution and Declaration of Independence in 1776.

Wilderness Road at Berea, Ky., The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come at Whitesburg, Ky. and Honey in the Rock at Beckley, W. Va., all deal with the American Civil War.

The Arkansaw Traveller at Hardy, Ark., The Shepherd of the Hills at Branson, Mo., and Trail of the Lonesome Pine at Big Stone Gap, Va., all take their themes from the lifestyles, music and crafts of the American mountain people.

Plums for All In Fall Lists

By PAT BARCLAY

I think it was Dorothy Parker who once remarked that she was considering giving up book reviewing because it interfered too much with her reading.

Trushay, as we used to say when we were young and hilarious. After attending another "Canadian Day" hoated by the Vancouver firm of McIntyre and Stanton, who are west coast representatives for a large group of publishers of Canadian books, I am feeling even more snowed under than usual.

Anyone who cares about Canadian books, and who hankers after keeping up with the bibliophiles, is going to find his bookshelves groaning this fall. It's not so much the quantity that alarms—it's the quality. Even when taken with that necessary grain of salt, the enthusiasm of Messrs. McIntyre and Stanton seems justifiable. The old battle for the plums, in which reviewers engaged in a genteel scramble for all the best books for themselves, has gone by the board. This fall, there should be enough best books to satisfy everybody.

M. and S. are publishing nearly 50 new titles, plus a number of reprints in both hardcover and paperback. Among others, New Press, Macmillan, and the Vancouver firm of J. J. Douglas Ltd. have particularly "strong lists" for this fall. The Douglas firm, which around two years ago began publishing manuscripts ignored by Eastern firms, is bringing out some 20 new titles, many of them by B.C. authors about subjects of particular interest to B.C. residents.

A bird's-eye view of Canadian publishing, such as an occasion like Canadian Day affords, reveals some interesting trends in and assumptions about the reading tastes of the Canadian public. Our appetite for politics is, or is judged to be, as insatiable as ever. Several firms have joined the rush to appease it with biographies of such figures as Robert Stanfield, Joey Smallwood, and Walter Gordon, and the second volume of Lester Pearson's memoirs will be out this fall.

Other politically-oriented works include essays by Andre Laurendeau and Peter Newman (Canada's "gentleman journalist," according to one enthusiast), and an analysis of last October's federal election by Walter Stewart, who wrote Shrug: Trudeau in Power. (He calls this new one Divide and Con, which indicates what he thinks of his new subject.)

And for those who like their politics as seen through a glass briefly, Stanley Burke and Roy Peterson have produced an ironic little paperback titled The Beavers, The Eagles and the Frogs. The cast of characters includes such well-known national figures as Lugubrious J. Standfast, David E. Loose, John Diefenboomer and Peter E. Waterhole.

Second only to the concentration on politics is the Farley Mowat industry. Indeed, good old Farley looks like leaving even our prime minister's gift to the nation's business, the fuddle duddle industry, completely in the shade.

Most of Mowat will now be available in paperback, including special editions for use in schools. Look for Lovable Farley posters, picturing the irascible elf himself in parka and tam, grinning through what looks like a wet snowball which has just hit him in the face, in your bookshops soon.

Our discovery of our native peoples, about 300 years too late, continues in full flood. The Hurons, the Cree and the Sioux will all receive respectful attention, and at least two major novels (by Rudy Wiebe and W. O. Mitchell) will deal with Indian subjects. Fire in the Raven's Nest, by Norman Newton, sounds especially intriguing. It contains analyses of certain Haida legends and demonstrates "that many of them were methods of remembering the movements of stars and planets, while others stored mathematical knowledge."

Other novels to watch for include new ones by Marian Engel, Jack Ludwig, Marie-Claire Blais and Richard Wright, who wrote The Weekend Man. There will be a new collection of stories by Gregory Clark, who is perhaps the best-loved and most under-praised writer in the country today, and a reissue of two early Morley Callaghan novella which first appeared in 1928.

Poetry will include what Earle Birney calls his "last book of poems"—he intends to devote himself to fiction in future—a new collection by Al Purdy titled Sex and Death (with a title like that, he can't lose; it's like naming a children's book Mystery Horse), and new collections by newer poets such as Susan Musgrave and Dale Zieroth.

Add to these some important biographies (Grey Owl, Norman Bethune, K. C. Irving, and the other half of the secret life of Frederick Philip Grove), a handful of enticing new art books, and a travel-cum-personal memoir by Pierre Berton, and you have all the proof you will ever need that Canadian literature is alive and well and living at home. Where, at this stage of our development at any rate, it belongs.

He 'Shakes Out the Dust' Of Northern Narratives

By TORCHY ANDERSON

"Spellbound, we remained beside our campfire, watching probably the most stupendous sight of wild game in North America since the bygone days of the buffalo. On and on the horde came, straight for the narrows of the river where we were camped . . .

"An old doe, nearly white,

TUNDRA, by Farley Mowat. McClelland and Stewart. $10.

led by twenty lengths; then came three or four full-grown bucks, walking side by side . . . that column widened like a fan until it lost itself on either side of a swarm of caribou so closely packed together that acres and acres of grey moss were completely hidden by their moving bodies. The noise of their hoofs and the breathing of their lungs sounded like far away thunder . . ."

Thierry Mallet, fur trader, watched the migration of the barrens caribou — maybe one of the last such migrations when the "deer" were estimated by the acre rather in numbers. He watched beside the Kazan River and later, in 1930, he wrote about it in a slim volume printed in New York.

In this third volume of his "Top of The World" trilogy Farley Mowat has included a slice of Thierry Mallet, a man who knew the sub-Arctic between two world wars, a man unique among the traders and trappers because he wrote about the country and its people. Few passages of northern writing convey more of the man's depth of feeling than his discovery of an Indian grave and his account of a band of 17 Eskimos who lay scattered on a trail where starvation overtook them.

Mowat tries — I think successfully — to "shake the dust" from some of the accounts of northern travel before the days of helicopters and rotary drilling. After all Canada's empire in the North was discovered, travelled and, to a comparatively minor extent, exploited, before men argued about pipelines and gambled on what scientific instruments told them might be oil riches.

From Samuel Hearne to Mallet, Mowat gives us the meat of explorers' accounts with excellent notations and explanations by himself.

"The Navy Meets the Barren Grounds" is Mowat's heading of his condensation of John Franklin's march to the Arctic sea in search of the Northwest Passage. He suspects that Franklin, imbued with the faith that a navy which could win Trafalgar could do anything, paid little attention to the advice of men who knew Arctic travel. He paraded into a land where he and his men were to see starvation, murder and (suspected) cannibalism.

Franklin staggered through to the Arctic sea only to stagger back with an empty belly and no tangible result. Later, of course, he was to die with his two ships' companies in trying by sea, what he had failed to accomplish by land.

The most successful and useful accomplishments in the Arctic got minor places in the record. The tragedies commanded the interest and sympathy of the world.

The stories of men like Hearne, MacKenzie, Tyrell brothers, Staffanson (who learned to live off the country) and the notable journeys of Northwest Mounted Police stand in emphatic contrast to the great tragedies.

In 1926 John Hornby, son of wealthy English parents, an eccentric who had wandered about the barrens for 20 years, a man with a vast knowledge of survival in a land where a thin line divides plenty from starvation, brought out from England his 18-year-old cousin, Edgar Christian, and Harold Adlar, ex-RAF pilot. The three ventured as partners into the Thelon River country. Hornby had a cabin on that river.

The ghastly story of their death by starvation is known in detail from a diary kept by Christian up to his death in the shack with the frozen remains of his two friends.

MOWAT
. . . trilogy

It is a story of devoted friendship in the face of slow, creeping death.

In this volume Mowat has preserved in readable, well notated form, with good maps and illustrations, the records of men who sought and found the unknown rivers and uncharted coasts and did it without accompanying public relations agents.

Sharing Their Art Treasures

By ANNE McDOUGALL

The Group of Seven takes on new power when you see examples of their work that have not become stale from blanket distribution of too-successful silk screen prints. The McMichael Collection has for some years given the Canadian public this chance.

A VISION OF CANADA: The McMichael Canadian Collection. Clarke, Irwin. $13.50.

This book now brings the record up to date.

"A Vision of Canada" is a workmanlike art book, based primarily on the Group of Seven, which inspired the original collection, but including paintings by the later, larger Canadian Group of Painters. There are interesting paintings by Emily Carr, David Milne and J. W. Morrice. There is also a sprinkling of West Coast Indian art and Eskimo art.

The collection itself is a remarkable achievement, initiated by a man and wife with unusual energy and vision.

Bob and Signe McMichael were a young couple starting out in business in Toronto when they bought their first Tom Thomson sketch. They both loved the outdoors, Bob from camping days in Algonquin Park, Signe from her early days in the Peace River district where her parents moved from Denmark when she was six.

When they built a log cabin at Kleinburg, 20 miles outside Toronto in 1954, the Thomson sketch, plus one by Lawren Harris, brought indoors some of the beauty that surrounded them outside. They were thrilled and from then on visualized a house full of paintings reflecting Canada. By 1960 they had almost 50 canvases and sketches. They added two wings, suitable for hanging paintings.

What had started as their home gradually turned into a gallery with friends and strangers coming to see the collection in its lovely natural setting. In 1964 the premier of Ontario, John Robarts, visited the McMichaels and was impressed by what they had done. The following year an agreement was reached whereby the government of Ontario would help maintain the grounds (increasing to 600 acres the total area) and protect the collection. The McMichaels would stay on to supervise the size and quality of the collection and share it with the people of Canada.

By Expo Year, the collection numbered 287 canvases, sketches and drawings. Between 1967 and 1970, 29,000 square feet of floor space have been added to the gallery, bringing the total to more than one acre of exhibition area.

A Vision of Canada describes how this private collection went public in an introductory 11 pages of text. The balance of the book contains thumb-nail sketches of the major artists represented. There is also a list of some of the artists and collectors who have sent paintings to the collection.

It makes a coffee-table book with a difference, like the collection itself. The idea seems to have started a trend, furthermore. An Ottawa couple, O. J. Firestone and his wife, have recently donated their house complete with paintings to the state, to go on view while they continue to live there. In a country as far-flung as Canada, it may be the best way we have of sharing our art treasures. It also fits in with this country's tradition of government co-operation with private individuals.

Credit should be given to Sampson Matthews Limited of Toronto for a fine production job.

Beauty Without Brains

By H. F. SMITH

The continuing fascination of the Napoleonic era for the modern reader springs from the paradoxes of those times. Out of the proletarian movement that was the French Revolution and the rise of an obscure captain of artillery came the dazzling court of the Empire. The romance of the self-crowned emperor is only years away from the ultra-realism of the retreat from Moscow and the carnage of Waterloo.

THE BETRAYERS, by Hubert Cole. Saturday Review Press. $8.95.

CAROLINE MURAT, by Joan Bear. Collins. $13.95.

Any historian of the period or biographer of the principal actors must come down on one side or the other: the debunkers emphasizing the pettiness of the individuals and the crimes they committed in the name of Empire, the romanticizers glorying in the splendor of the courts, the beauty of the ladies, the chivalry of the men.

Without intending to do so, Hubert Cole and Joan Bear have done a great disservice to that romantic image. Their subjects capture the romantic imagination, and they try to present them to us as personifications of beauty and gallantry.

Caroline, Napoleon's sister, is a beautiful woman adept at using her sex in intrigues of the imperial court, yet is always loyal to her husband. Murat, the beau sabreur, is a chivalric figure who rises from obscurity to become Grand Marechal of Napoleon's armies, and who knows only two commands, "Forward!" and "Attack!"

Yet these biographies prove there were not enough brains between the two of them to bait a fishhook. Caroline squabbles over her place in the order of presentation to the emperor and the comfort of her chair; she dreams of being Princess of Poland or Queen of Spain, but loses her Duchy of Naples in a few short years when the Napoleonic bubble, built on conquest, collapses. Her brother Joseph much more shrewdly siphons off some of the profit to buy a house in New Jersey, the equivalent of a Swiss bank account in those days. Even Caroline's planned seduction of Metternich does not save her, after Waterloo, from the ignominy of pinching pennies to survive, albeit with a considerable retinue of servants and much decorum.

Still, it is Murat who appears the more pathetic of the two. Having married into the imperial family, he is denied the dignity of his soldierly virtues in the squabbling over kingdoms and principalities. Deceived by his wife, his brother-in-law, and the fiscal foolishness of the feudal arrangements engineered by Napoleon (he goes broke in Naples supporting the army Napoleon quarters upon him), he remains doggedly loyal to his sordid end, cut down by a firing squad of his erstwhile subjects when he tries to recapture Italy with a force of 200 men. Poor Murat. He deserved better.

ONE WOMAN'S BATTLEGROUND

By DAVID DUNSMUIR

As a small step towards a better world, authors might be allowed to write their own dust-jacket blurbs.

Flora Rheta Schreiber, once the psychiatry editor of Science Digest, would certainly have produced a more accurate description of her latest book than "the true story of a woman possessed by 16 different personalities."

Sybil was far from being "a woman possessed." Take away the 16 personalities, and where's the woman?

SYBIL, by Flora Rheta Schreiber. Copp Clark. $9.50.

From her earliest days, Sybil had been the meeting ground for warring selves that held one another hostage. This painstaking account describes the campaign that unified them within her.

The process took 11 years of grief and joy and many revelations for Sybil and her psychoanalyst. The patient was 42 at the end of it, able at last to call her time her own.

Till then, life had been half a set of beads without a string, clutched with quiet despair. Hours or years would pass unrecalled by the "waking self," which had learned to hide its bewilderment over games played by the clock. The existence of other players went unsuspected.

Sybil discovered that she had found her way through a maze of domestic horror by parcelling out her emotional overload.

Different personalities coped with her religious conflicts, with the rage she was forbidden to express or the physical pain she did not dare to recognize.

Others had made her childhood solutions their own lasting reality: she was not "really" a girl (a view defended with much indignation by her two male selves); her mother was not "really" her mother.

Each self, born under stress, would take over again whenever its resources were needed. Some were known to others; some were not. Some plotted against her, some tried to help, without her knowledge. Reconciling them — even recognizing them — was not easy.

With scientific insight and deep compassion, Schreiber suggests that many cases of amnesia or intermittent blackouts may involve multiple personality.

Her report is no more objective than it has to be, as documentation of the only known instance of such massive therapy. Despite a few lapses into the breathless prose of bygone three-name lady novelists, all 350 pages are well worth the reading.

Times and places fuse in self-discovery. The telling manages to be sad and exultant at once.

The facts cannot be absorbed without pity for the raw wounds inflicted on a child by sexual hypocrisy and the denial of feelings. Still, Sybil did heal herself. The book's triumph is hers.

Why Are You Whining, Cinderella?

By TOM DONNELLY

When "Love Story" was selling by the gross, and the movie version had theatre goers knee-deep in tears, a lot of critics were being mighty mean to author Erich Segal.

"It's the personal villification I can't bear," said Segal in a 1971 interview a day or two after the National Book Awards jury had threatened to resign unless 'Love Story" was withdrawn from the competition on the grounds that FAIRY TALE, by Erich Segal. Fitzhenry and Whiteside. $5.70.

Segal's damp little novel "would have demeaned the other books simply be being on the list."

Segal said, "You'd think I'd done something deliberately meretricious in writing the book. I'm a good guy, a serious man. Write sincerely . . ."

So here it is 1973 and I have before me a new book by good guy Segal. It's called "Fairy Tale," it has jolly illustrations by an artist named Dino Kotopoulis, it contains 46 pages and sells for $5.70.

Far be it from me to vilify anybody, or question the seriousness and sincerity of a man who guarantees he's sincere and serious; I'll just say I find Segal's latest production mysterious in the extreme. To put it baldly, the question that comes to mind is this: What is it?

A surface explanation is easily arrived at. Segal has written a variation on Jack and the Beanstalk and located it in hillbilly territory. The story begins, "Atip the top of an obscure Ozark in a quaint little settlement known as Poop's Peak there dwelt and lived a group of hardy mountaineers."

These "Poopers," Segal tells us, were steeped—"or rather soaked"—in the traditions of their forefathers, namely snoozing and boozing. They were moonshiners. Segal's principal characters are the Kertuffels, a clan dwelling "in the very heart, or better said, the very liver of Poop's Peak." Zeke Kertuffel runs a still of distinction. As Segal insists upon putting it (and for all I know whole relays of editors tried to dissuade him), "The skill of his still gave a thrill to the swill."

Zeke decides the Kertuffel clan needs a new car, since their Model T is antiquated. "Actually," Segal hastens to inform us, "Zeke did not employ the term 'antiquated' inasmuch as it was not a term either congenial or familiar to his usual parlance." How's that for high-class funny-writing?

Young Jake Kertuffel is sent to the big city to "barter the Model T for something groovier and, as it were, behoovier." Jake falls into the clutches of the vilest used-car dealer in all literature. This foul ogre, Happy Humphrey by name, gives Jake a handful of beans in exchange for the Model T. All the Kertuffels think Jake is dumb as a duck, but would you believe that when those beans are planted a magic tree shoots up? And up and up?

Maybe Segal wrote his story for kids with a big hate against used-car dealers. Or is he maybe aiming at adults who haven't curled up with a book since "Eloise"? or maybe—this is admittedly a wild guess—he could be trying to help Tolkein addicts break the Hobbit habit. Poop's Peak freaks could rise in the campuses. Stranger things have happened.

SEGAL
. . . pooped out

Of course it's not inconceivable that Segal sincerely wishes to entertain in the simplest way possible and make a fantastic buck by doing so. If this "Fairy Tale" sells big Segal has really and truly got it made. This formula lends itself to a million variations. Or rather, a million stories can be re-designed to fit this formula. Take the most popular fairy tale of all time, for example.

A Segalized "Cinderella" might go like this:

Cinderella is lolling around in the home of her rotten stepmother, watching a TV game show called "Loser Take All" and wishing she could be a contestant and collect one of those prizes, like a rabbit fur bikini for not being able to answer correctly the question: "What would be the last fur Princess Grace would wear to a beach ball."

Cinderella can goof off like this because with today's push-button labor-saving devices it's impossible for her to slave from sunup to sundown, as tradition requires. However, in an all-electric ranch-type rambler there aren't any nice comfortable ashes for Cinderella to sit among, so she has to perch on a contemporary chair made of two nylon ropes fastened to three stainless steel belaying pins.

"Oh dear! Oh dear! I fear for my rear!" Cinderella whines every time she gets up or down, a sentiment that turns off such door-to-door salesmen as come her way.

The doorbell rings. Cinderella answers it, still whining about what that chair is doing to her vertebrae. This time it isn't a salesman. It's the Nova lady, come to demonstrate her new line of Nova magic and wand cosmetics, which are positively not available in department stores, not even at the point of a gun. "Why are you whining, Cinderella?" asks the Nova Lady. "Spine out of whack? Don't worry. My magic wand products will cure what ails you."

"Forget my aching back," says Cinderella. "What is really eating at me is a gnawing hunger to be gorgeously dressed and go to that big society ball tonight and nab the playboy scion of that crazy billionaire industrialist who's picking up the tab."

"I have the very thing for you," says the Nova lady. "Just rub a little of my magic wand dream cream into that leathery skin of yours." Cinderella does so and is instantly transformed into a gorgeously dressed beauty with glass slippers on her feet and a luxuriously upholstered motorized pumpkin to cradle her aching back and get her to the ball on time.

"I'd planned to conjure up a — " (here the Nova lady names one of the most expensive cars on the market) "but all those models were recalled to the factory this morning because somebody found out the right rear axle is missing. That'll be a dollar ninety-five for the magic wand cream. Please."

After Cinderella has shelled out the money and is driving away, the Nova lady calls after her: "I almost forgot to tell you! If you're still at the ball when the clock strikes 12 you turn into a frog!"

And if that doesn't sell, how about one beginning:

"Once upon time there was a Yale University professor of classics who was very sincere and serious. He sat down at his typewriter one fine day and composed a story about a dumb jock and a smart cookie. Millions of people loved the story and the professor was steeped in the sweet sunshine of universal affection when suddenly a cloud no bigger than a critic's hand appeared and . . ."

Victoria Summer Arts Festival Can (and Should) Get Better

audrey johnson

It is distinctly in keeping with the character of this city that a full-scale summer festival of fine arts — when and if it arrives — should come about a little at a time.

Each step will have been cautiously tested by the citizens and closely pondered by authorities before being endorsed.

Caution, doubt, skepticism and sticky gobs of apathy will have accompanied every phase.

Can anyone imagine a Stratford happening here?

Would a Tom Patterson find anyone to listen to his ideas, let alone band together with others to find ways and means of implementing them?

True, another idea man in the fine arts, Laszlo Gati, by using caution and good timing, has succeeded in bringing about a start in the right direction.

The summer festival that he initiated last year with funds provided by municipal, provincial and federal grants, was a public success and is back again this year.

The official opening ceremonies, Monday at 7 p.m. in Heritage Court, could prove a milestone in the history of this city.

We know it's good from our own and our visitors' points of view. We can begin to discern a pattern and a destination.

It is bigger this year, more diversified in location throughout the Greater Victoria area and it has expanded to include another fine art form.

It has its distinctive character — outdoor sunset symphony pop concerts that are free to all people.

And now, back to back within the provincial museum complex, an art exhibition by Victoria's distinguished group, The Limners.

Plans for next year, already in the sketching stage, are to draw still another art form into the pattern — perhaps dance, possibly even theatre, though the latter, being more costly, will probably be the last to develop in Victoria.

Still, no rush. We can take our time.

If slow, natural growth emerging from the tested and acceptable rootstock of our area, is the only way we can achieve an internationally recognized position as a festival city, so be it.

There will of course be a few thousand Victorians, especially those living in the surrounding municipalities, who will continue to doubt or even reject the festival concept.

Many are not interested in the arts and that's fair enough.

But they should be interested in the overall prosperity and well-being of the area in which they live.

And if the argument is that a fine arts festival benefits only the minority of the population concerned, then listen to the New York Times' Walter Kerr comment on the Canadian Stratford at the start of its 21st year:

"I'm back once again from the Shakespeare Festival at Stratford, Ontario, and I'm struck once again not simply by what is going on upon a stage but by the strange things that have happened to a town God otherwise had forgot.

"Stratford . . . is nowhere. When I first made the trip 21 years ago, it was so difficult to get to that reviewers had to be dumped off an overnight train at six in the morning to be met by drivers . . . to carry them on the jaunt.

"The town itself was unprepossessing; indeed "unprepossessing" is sheer flattery. Hotels were inadequate or non-existant . . . Restaurants were little more than diners . . . nightlife was reserved for fireflies.

"Year by year the look has changed, not into the sort of opportunistically quaint and essentially junky bid for atmosphere . . . but into a trim, spacious, confident, quiet reflection of renewed life.

"There is scarcely a facade that hasn't been refurbished, a street that hasn't been widened or repaved, a tourist comfort that hasn't been seen to.

"Stratford remains a small town, certainly not a smart town; it is still in the middle of nowhere. But it is unmistakably a prosperous town, placidly pleased to be fed by roots of relatively recent origin, but by roots that now run deep and secure.

"The life of an entire society has been substantially altered as if by magic. The magic? One theatre building that people want to get into. One building."

There are plenty of people in Victoria who will understand what Kerr is talking about. The people, for instance, who are members of, or interested in the Pacific Coast Centre Foundation.

They will know that when Kerr talks about the building he is talking about the facility that makes possible the great happenings within. (If anyone is entertaining the notion that the Royal Theatre could fill the role for Victoria, they are badly misinformed and ignorant on the subject).

There is, of course, little comaprison between Victoria and Stratford, geographically or any other way.

Stratford back in 1950, had nothing to attract summer visitors. Victoria has always had something.

Today it has a great deal more, thanks in particular to the musicians, actors, and other kinds of entertainers who have enlived what, within memory, was a sleepy, ultra-conservative town.

There are people who will say why do we need a festival in Victoria. Everything's pretty good here as it is.

Things are pretty good here, in many ways. But nothing is ever so good that it can't be improved and improvement in a city's lifestyle is not generally confined to a single segment of the population.

Stratford is living, 20-year-long proof that benefits from this kind of venture are widely shared and for the general commonweal.

Cathedral Recitals

Christ Church Cathedral's 1973 summer recital series, and continues throughout July "Music in the Cathedral," begins Saturday at 4:00 p.m., and continues throughout July and August.

This week's performers will be James Kennedy, recorders, baroque flute, and krummhorn, and Peter Bishop, organ and harpsichord.

Kennedy, a graduate of UVic and a faculty member of the Victoria Conservatory of Music, is a specialist in the performance of baroque music on original instruments.

Winner for the past five years of the open recorder class in the Victoria Music Festival, this year he also won the senior woodwind championship, and represented Victoria at the finals of the Provincial Music Festival in Vancouver.

He has played in Vancouver, Seattle, and Portland, as well as in numerous recitals in Victoria.

Bishop is now a graduate student at UVic, in addition to being assistant organist at the cathedral. He has given recitals in Vancouver, Spokane, and Victoria.

The program this Saturday will feature Bach's Trio Sonata No. 1 in E-flat major for organ, and works by Francesco Parsanti and Andrew Parcham.

CPR Stage Saga Revised

Three months of working, performing and re-assessing have resulted in a new, somewhat altered edition of Company One's saga of the CPR, Old Tomorrow.

Revisions are part of the policy of Company One in respect to all their shows. In this, their most ambitious to date, the revisions are based on suggestions received from audiences in discussions held following each performance.

Originally seen April 13 and 14 at the Empress Hotel Crystal Ballroom, the show returns there for a summer run of 12 performances, starting July 19 and repeated every Thursday, Friday and Saturday through Aug. 11.

The action takes place on top of eight movable platforms with the audience free to circulate, following the scenes as they take focus in different parts of the room.

For the summer performances the ensemble will contain five new actors and actresses. They are Santo Cervello from Vancouver, Jim Netherton, Calgary; Kim Yaroshevskaya, Montreal. Rejoining the company after a year's absence are Barbara Poggemiller and Glynis Leyshon.

Remaining with the company are Bill Murdoch, Peter Hall, Murray Ord and Marie Cadieux.

GIVE UNTO CAESAR . . .

WATERLOO, Ont. (CP) — More than 500 Gideons from across Canada have been cautioned against marvelling at the job they are doing in distributing the word of God.

Dr. W. R. Davenport, 47, of Campvellsville, Ky., the Gideons' international president, told national convention delegates that the last year has been one of setting records in a numerical sense.

He said the Gideons—world organization of laymen whose purpose is to distribute the Bible—placed almost 13 million copies of the Old and New Testaments throughout the world in the last year and membership has reached almost 40,000.

More than $7 million was raised for the purchase of scriptures.

"All these things are great and tremendous in a numerical way 'but it is not by might nor by power but by My spirit, sayeth the Lord'," Davenport said.

He said Gideons should not glory in their own success in spreading the word of God but should give the glory to God where it belongs.

Acute Observation Key to Characterization

By TERRY COLEMAN

"I am the repository," said Sir Alec Guinness, "of very odd pieces of information."

He had been a friend of the late Sir Sydney Cockerell, who was a friend of Tolstoy's. "He told me he went to stay with Tolstoy, 1900 or something, in Yalta, and he arrived and was shown out under the apple trees where they had tea. They were eating pieces of cucumber with honey spread on them. Then Tolstoy asked him up into the billiard room where you couldn't see the billiard table because the whole room was entirely covered with unopened letters from all over the world."

A sense of the spirit of the past? — "Not only a sense of the past, a sense of the little oddities of the past."

Sir Alec is an exact man. when he offers lunch, and you ask if one o'clock or so would be all right, he says at first 10 minutes to one, and then, having apparently made some necessary calculation, that 15 minutes to one would be better. Then he arrives to the minute, in clothes that appear to be exactly new that day, and conducts an utterly composed conversation. He is the sort of man who, whatever he had done, would have done it surpassingly well. Certainly Field-Marshal Guinness, if he had been a soldier. In fact it is probably only by the mercy of some angel that he is not by now president of Colman, Prentis and Varley, because he did get his start in advertising.

This happened when he was 18. He had been educated at good and genteel schools in the "Separate Tables" country of Bournemouth and Eastbourne, and when the time came for him to leave his head master was kind and helpful. He knew Guinness wanted to act but felt that it would be more sensible for him to do a proper job. Advertising was thought proper.

so through a friend of the headmaster, Guinness was given a job with Arks publicity, and wrote copy for Rose's lime juice, Mullard wireless valves, and Wilkinson's razor blades. Then he was translated to layout and one day sent an illustration to the block-by four ad for the front page of the Daily Mail. It was late arriving, and when it did arrive it was carried by two men in a taxi. He had marked it four feet by four feet, and not inches. The Daily Mail went to press with a blank space on the front page. The agency were very under-after censorship and a safe time, as a leader page article. It now reads in a very matter of fact, stiff upper lip way. His crew, when they saw it, were not delighted, saying it was their recollection, as it was his, that they had all been seasick.

It had occasionally occurred

makers to be made into a four standing. Guinness began once more to look towards the stage.

A Miss Bannerman saved him. He had applied to RADA for a scholarship and paid his audition fee, but when he turned up they told him there were no scholarships that year. He wandered desolately into the streets and there ran into a girl he had known as a boy on a beach. She was Miss Bannerman, who told him to go straight away to Fay Compton's where they were holding auditions that moment. He recited the bits of "Three Sisters" and "Henry V," and did an impersonation of George Arliss impersonating Disraeli, which he had prepared for RADA.

He thinks it was on the strength of the George Arliss that he was given the scholarship, which paid for tuition only. He lived on 26s a week private income until he at last found work. This he did largely thanks to Gielgud, whom he had asked for help and who sent him to audition after audition, telling him to report back each day. For a long time there was nothing. One day there were 20 pound notes on Gielgud's dressing table, who said "You're too thin. You don't eat enough. Take these." Guinness declined out of pride, but found a part that day.

By the time the war came in 1939 he mas only 25 but already a known actor with the Old Vic, who at first paid him £7 a week but then, when he played Hamlet, a princely £20. "Hamlet," not only in modern dress, but in its entirety — lasting more than four hours. This is trying for the audience, but easier for the man playing Hamlet. Guinness says Shakespeare knew what he was doing, and in the tragedies left the hero a break of 20 or 30 minutes to recover before the last big scene. In "Hamlet" it comes roughly from the time Laertes and the King plot together. But when the plays are cut, as they almost always are now, these are the passages that get left out.

Guinness went to war and became a lieutenant in the Royal Navy. In the invasion of Sicily he commanded a landing craft and wrote letters describing the landings to his wife, Gielgud, Martita Hunt, and Cockerell, Cock-erell, unknown to him, sent the letter to the Daily Telegraph where it appeared, to Guinness that after the war he ought to do something serious, but he couldn't think what, and so returned to the Old Vic. But it was his films, including delightful "Kind Hearts and Coronets," that made him. It was at first suggested to him that he should play four of the d'Ascoynes; to take on all eight was his own idea. By 1959 he had an Oscar, for "Bridge on the River Kwai," and a knighthood, for distinguished services.

Now Sir Alec is a religious man. He says he does from time to time have large doubts but overcomes them. (This, as it happens, is the experience of bishops: only the simple minded have undoubting faith.) Before the war he flirted with Buddhism, but abandoned it. Though he served in the war, he had tendencies towards pacifism, not liking the idea of taking the lives of his fellow creatures, or of having his own taken. He thinks he did take none. At the invasion of Elba he pointed a gun at a ship but does not suppose he hit her.

And, again like many religious men, Guinness in his early years was not merely an agnostic but an active atheist, very Left Book Club. "I used to be very anti-clerical, very. Shudder if I passed a priest or a nun."

But then 17 years ago he walked into a Catholic church and told the priest he would like to know more, and became a convert. How did this happen? He says that what turned his sympathy was this. He was staying at a village near Macon, making a film based on Chesterton's "Father Brown" stories. He was playing Father Brown. They were shooting on location outside the village where he was staying, and one night in the dark, still wearing his priest's robes, he started to walk the mile or so home.

"It was absolutely dark. I heard little footsteps running after me. Suddenly I felt my hand taken by about a seven-year-old boy, who walked with me all the way back to the village swinging my hand and chattering. I only caught little bits of what he was saying. I didn't dare utter a word in case I frightened him with a foreign accent or my clumsy French. I remained absolutely silent, and eventually he squeezed my hand and disappeared, and I thought it was simply marvellous that a child in the pitch dark, in a dark lane, will run up to a man because he's dressed as a priest. And it totally changed my attitude. Don't you think that's marvellous? No, you're doubtful?"

I said I supposed I was a sceptic.

"But leaving religion aside," he said. "I don't base my religion on that. But it's the attitude. No, I think it's marvellous that a small boy has confidence ... I've always looked back on it as a magic moment."

No wonder Guinness in such circumstances was taken for a priest. He looks priestly enough across a lunch table. Part of it is that he keeps so still. He has ascetic moments. He goes to an abbey on the Isle of Wight to make short retreats. He can be ascetic about money. In 1970 he earned only £90, and cannot now remember why that was so. And in 1960 he was reported to have declined £500-000 for doing some American beer advertisements on television.

Oh, he said, that was not quite so. The fee was one million dollars. He would have had to appear in 12 ads, and produce them himself out of the fee, and appear briefly in some of the shows that would appear round the ads. He did not want to do it. Too much exposure was bad for an actor. It was nothing to do with the product. He had terribly complimentary letters from temperance societies, but had to reply disillusioning them.

Over-exposure? At the moment Sir Alec is appearing in London in a new play, "Habeas Corpus." He has two new films on, in one of which he is Hitler and in the other the Pope. Only last week "Kind Hearts and Coronets" was shown again on television. "Bridge on the River Kwai" is being shown again in Europe, and is coming back here too. So if over-exposure was dangerous, he ought to be dead, didn't he?

He said it all had come in three weeks, and he had much rather it had been spread over a year. If there was too much of you, people would see your name yet again and say, "Oh, the hell with that."

It has been said of Sir Alec that he observes people closely, to the extent of following them, so that he can note with exactness how different people behave in different situations. When I asked him he said that the following was many years ago when he was a young actor, but that he still watches closely, and perhaps absorbs from his observation something of a person's stance and predicament.

BRYAN'S BEAT

Best Since Frankie

By BRYAN HAY
Times Staff

I hate to disappoint one of Victoria's few groupies — but that wasn't Bob McBride you were talking to on the night of the Lighhouse concert at Memorial Arena.

Nor did he have laryngitis.

You were talking to Grant Spence, manager of Flying Circus, an Australian rock group now residing in Toronto, who just happens to look like the former vocalist of Lighthouse.

McBride split the group just before this last Western tour after suffering what the band refers to collectively as a "nervous breakdown" but which the hypsters call a "chance to pursue a solo career."

The first fruition of that solo career is now at hand—and, so sneakily enough, is the latest album of the aforementioned Australian group.

Both incidentally are on Capitol. Bob's album is Butterfly Days (Capitol ST 6384) and the Flying Circus is ST 6391.

But there the similatiry ends.

Bob, whose album was co-produced by the short-lived folky duo of Aarons and Ackley—also Capitol artists—is really into a mellow stance on this outing—far different from the magic he laid down as lead singer and main arranger for Lighthouse.

The album has echoes of the sounds of music that I think existed a couple of years ago—I say I think, because I'm not sure . . . it's just that it's the kind of music I wanted to exist then . . . and I still want to exist now for that soft juke-box playing after the umpteenth round of beer—when all you want to think about is that special lady who mebee cares for you or mebbe not but you care for her . . . or something.

It's the kind of trip laid down so beautifully when I was a babe in arms by one Francis Albert Sinatra and by nobody since then.

Except Frankie.

I'm not trying to hype Bob, but it just could be that in another generation we'll be hauling ourselves into some dimly-lit haunt, plugging four or six bits into the machine and treating our minds to one of his ditties which will put us in mind of some chick somewhere, some time that we want to stash into a special place in our head over a glass of amber-colored fluid.

Flying Circus, however, is different.

Music that hasn't changed in 15 or 20 years.

●

A week or so ago, I picked up a copy of Rolling Stone—the first I've bothered with in a couple of years.

High-calibre, in-depth work coupled with a lean and muscled writing which made the article a pleasure.

Not, however, enough of a pleasure to persuade me to part with six bits on a regular basis for a sheet which could well afford to be far cheaper.

It's nice to know, though, that the Rolling Stone types are laying out a little of the copious amount of bread they're raking for some worthwhile writing.

COMING UP

Summer Festival featuring Victoria Symphony Orchestra, begins with a single concert Monday at 7 p.m. in Heritage Court. Double sunset concerts of symphonic pops programs will be held there Wednesday and Friday. Parallel art show in the Archives Building open until 9 p.m.

On Tuesday the Phoenix Players' third production enters the repertory at Phoenix Theatre. An Evening of Mime is directed by Kaz Piesowocki with music of Eric Satie. Curtain, 8 p.m.

The Fantasticks will be repeated Wednesday and Friday. On Thursday, The House of Blue Leaves will be seen and the Mime program will be repeated on Saturday.

An all-Schubert program is next in the UVic summer chamber music concert series. It will be performed by members of the ensemble Tuesday and Thursday at 8 p.m. in the MacLaurin Building auditorium on UVic campus.

Another recital series, Music in the Cathedral, taking place Saturdays through July and August, at 4 p.m. in Christ Church Cathedral, will feature John Gallienne at the organ July 14.

Visitation Study Topic

The art of visitation is the study topic for a Centennial United Church seminar scheduled for July 13 and 14 with guest speaker Rev. Donald Buteyn of First Presbyterian Church in Hollywood.

Discussion topics are: Why Christians visit; Visiting the adherent, lapsed or apathetic member, fellow churchmen, shut-ins, non-churched person, and sick of body and mind.

Registration starts July 13 at 7:30 p.m. at the church, corner of Gorge Road and David Street.

Panel Discussion On Bergman Film

An experiment in audience participation will be held at the Fox Cinema Wednesday night after a special showing of Ingmar Bergman's acclaimed new film, Cries and Whispers.

There will be a single showing of the film at 8 p.m. followed by a panel discussion in which the audience will be invited to take part. Panel members are Lyvia Brown, an art history graduate and film enthusiast; David Crampton, astronomer and also a film buff; and critic George Berhardt.

YOUNG SMILES AT CENTRE

A drop-in centre where the emphasis is on smiling young people will be sponsored during the summer at Emmanuel Baptist Church, 2121 Cedar Hill Cross Road, Monday through Friday from 7:30 to 11:30 p.m.

Visitors can participate in an array of activities, including, sports, games, crafts, jigsaw puzzles and discussion groups.

Personal counselling will also be offered.

SPECIAL GRANT FOR ASTRONOMER

Dr. Jeremy Tatum, well-known astronomer and ornithologist of the University of Victoria, has been awarded a special grant from the National Research Council to observe comet Kohutek from the Cerro-Tololo Interamerican Observatory in Chile.

The $1,200 grant will cover travelling and incidental expenses during his stay in Chile.

Comet Kohutek, named after its discoverer, will be visible to Victorians late in November or early in December.

Tatum will use highly specialized equipment to try to determine the comet's composition, temperature and density. As the comet will be high in the sky in the southern hemisphere, it will be more easily viewed by astronomers.

Gardener Work Is Never Done

GARDENING
jack beastall

Seasoned local gardeners sow a complete vegetable garden around the 15th of July, much to the amazement of newcomers. It is just one of the many gardening practices which are common only to the west coast of Canada.

For example, we never go out on the 24th of May and sow the entire vegetable garden figuring our work is finished for the year.

If we did we should certainly have too much ready for picking at one time, or we could lose everything in a poor spring. Instead we start small sowings (just two feet of row) as soon as the soil is workable in April and make succession sowings every 10 days or so throughout May.

We are not farmers therefore we do not need a ton of anything by a set date for marketing. Instead we gauge our sowings to the weekly requirements of the family, use the crops while sweet, young, and tender, enjoying flavors and nutrients that are lost during shipping and storage.

And it is more than a coincidence that no crop remains in the soil long enough to be badly damaged by insects, and the later sowings quickly take the place of any lost to bad weather.

By mid-July there are plenty of spaces where earlier sowings have been removed. These spaces are now filled with vegetables that will be used from September on until the supply is exhausted or the more tender types killed by frost.

We can reasonably expect good growing weather through to the end of September so that any vegetable which matures from seeding in 75 days or less can be included in our fall vegetable garden.

The approximate length of time to maturity is stated in seed catalogues and on seed packets. Be sure to note whether the time stated is from seeding to maturity or from planting-out to maturity; the latter adds 30 days to the maturing time.

Gardeners who make regular practice of sowing a mid-July vegetable garden usually purchase sufficient seed for this purpose in the spring. Others may experience some difficulty in locating a supply because the consignment stocks have usually been removed from the multitude of outlets that display them earlier in the season.

Fortunately, agents for specific seed firms, and the farm supply stores dealing in seeds and feed, carry a fairly complete stock at all times.

As we go through the seed catalogue we often find early, second-early, mid-season, main crop, and late varieties listed for some vegetables. Of these we choose the early varieties, that is early peas, early carrots, early beets and so forth.

There is a wide range of vegetables from which to choose. Our list can include green and wax beans (dwarf forms), beets, cress, hybrid 60-day Chinese cabbage, short stumpy carrots, 50-day early sweet corn, cabbage variety "Flower-of-Spring," Kohlrabi, okra, lettuce of many types, bunching or salad onions, parsley, early variety of peas, 60-day sweet peppers, radishes both regular and the winter "Black Spanish", rutabaga or Swede turnip, and spinach.

Okra and sweet peppers succeed in warm gardens, but are not likely to ripen in colder exposed gardens or when August or early September is cool and overcast; but they are worth a try if you have some seed on hand.

Since the weather is likely to be dry and warm at sowing time better germination and faster growing results from filling shallow drills with screened compost, watering well, then sowing the seed directly into the compost. It also pays to have some six-inch shiplap boards or something similar to rest against wood pegs at a 45-degree angle on the sunny side of the rows to provide shade during the hottest part of the day. Do not lay the boards on the ground because insects will shelter beneath and devour the seedlings as they germinate.

We continue to sow small quantities of lettuce until August 15, after that a sowing of winter lettuce in a cold-frame where it can be protected in severe weather.

With the summer and fall sowings of lettuce, we prick out three or four seedlings every week according to the family requirements, thus avoiding a whole row going to seed for want of gathering. Any large seedlings left in the seed row when the next sowing is ready for transplanting are used as leaf lettuce for salads.

Green, or bunching, onions, and radishes are sown in August. Peas and dwarf beans sown July 15 will crop in September and produce until damaged from frost if regularly picked.

Rutabagas, or Swede turnips, are always sown mid-July because they need warm soil and rapid growth to be sweet and palatable. Start using when the size of a tennis-ball.

In a sheltered corner there will be a few springs of parsley for use by October, the plants remaining over winter for an early spring supply before going to seed. The Black Spanish winter radish, a long radish, will take light frosts, or can be grown in a cold-frame.

Spinach sown in July is used as needed through the fall. Swiss chard sown the same time will stand lower temperatures and the plants often give a good supply of young leaves from late February until they go to seed.

A few leeks can be sown now and transplanted when eight inches high to holes eight inches deep and nine inches apart. Drop one seedling into each hole and water well to wash in enough soil to cover the roots. This sowing can be used in February.

Plants from the mid-July sowing of Flower-of-spring cabbage will be ready to set out into vacant spaces during late August into September. This cabbage stands over winter to be used as loose-leaf in April, the remainder heading up rapidly in May. As temperatures rise at the end of May the plants quickly burst and produce flowers.

In gardens subject to severe fall frosts, and low winter temperatures with snow, it is better to forego cabbage and substitute Scotch Curly Kale, from which a picking of the heavily crinkled leaves can be made at any time, even from under a foot of snow.

Brussels sprout plants set out in May provide the sprouts for Christmas dinner, later sowings are not ready until February.

Italian sprouting broccoli (green or purple) supplies heads for picking well into the fall. The newer "perpetual" or "perennial" varieties produce large plants during the fall and quantities of bud clusters for picking in the spring.

WORK FOR WEEK

Lift daffodils and other narcissi now if necessary for remaking beds. Dry bulbs quickly in airy shaded place, then clean for storing during summer. Replant in mid September.

Early summer and spring flowering perennials can be lifted for propagation — doronicum, pyrethrum, trollius. Replant young pieces with roots. Keep damp and shaded for a few days.

For plants growing in open sunny places, a mulch of partially decomposed compost over the root area will prevent baking of the soil, especially in heavy clay. On sandy soils the mulch prevents rapid loss of moisture. Water heavily before mulching. Herbaceous plants especially benefitting from this treatment are perennial phlox, asters, heleniums and rudbeckias.

Cut herbs for drying just before flower buds open. Those with leaves for freezing can be cut whenever there is a crop.

Set out fall cabbage and broccoli.

Pinsent . . . one-man crusade

Bitter Rowdyman Starts His War

By JACQUES HAMILTON

MONTREAL (CP) — Gordon Pinsent, embittered by the failure of The Rowdyman to break out in dollar signs after rave reviews, is on a one-man crusade to reform Canada's film industry.

Here to sweat through a National Film Board production called The Heat Wave Lasted Four Days, the 42-year-old author-star of The Rowdyman says he is going to go on making films in Canada "no matter what."

Between shots in the 100-degree-plus heat of an apartment set Thursday, Pinsent found the relative coolness of a bathroom, and the time to puzzle over the failure of his film to make money.

Despite critics' opinion that it was the best Canadian film made, The Rowdyman has ended up with only the barest of chances to make back its $340,000 cost.

Pinsent blames most of the disaster on distributors. Poor theatre locations, short runs, the inability to line up proper distribution in the United States; his list of complaints is long.

NEED TO BEND

The distributors, he says, "try to go in cheap and come out rich on a film that needs all the help it can get. I think everyone needs to bend over a little and help things along."

Pinsent wrote the script for The Rowdyman, played the title role and put up half the cost of the production.

The Newfoundland setting of the film is where he was raised, the characters in the film are from his own life, and so "it was a film that meant a lot to me."

"You say to yourself, 'I won't allow myself to think about it because I've got to move onto other things,' but deep down I'm deeply hurt."

Since his experience with The Rowdyman, Pinsent says, he has spent a great deal of time trying to understand what has to be done to make films successfully in Canada.

WOULD BE LOST

The obvious solution, he says, is to go half-American and half-Canadian, "but then we're back where we started with Canadians as second players."

"If the talent in this country can just go to bed with the money in this country, maybe it can all come together.

"Otherwise we're just going to be left on the sidelines with our dreams."

He has just finished turning the script of The Rowdyman into a novel, "trying the Love Story trick," and has finished a second screenplay.

The NFB production here, one of a series of 10 for English-French language instruction, has him cast as a television cameraman who accidentally films an underworld transaction.

IMPAIRED BOATER FINED

CASTLEGAR (CP) — David Neufeld, 34, of Syringa Creek, has been fined $400 after pleading guilty to a charge of being impaired while driving a motorboat.

If the fine is not paid, a jail sentence of two months will be imposed. The charge followed an incident in February on Arrow Lake near the Hugh Keenlyside dam.

Victoria SWAG Takes Swipe at Munro

By ANN DUNSMUIR
Times Staff

Victoria's Status of Women Action Group has blasted the federal government for the composition of the advisory council on the status of women.

SWAG president Dianne Grimmer has sent a letter to Labor Minister John Munro stating that the government's selection of council members "borders on an insult to Canadian women."

Mrs. Grimmer also criticizes government strategy prior to the selection of the council which was announced June 2.

Mrs. Grimmer says that the first week in April the government sent women's groups "the vaguest of letters" asking them to suggest people who could contribute to the council.

This official letter gave no indication of the amount of travel time required, stipends or the length of time members would be away from home.

"These are necessary considerations for anyone who might be interested in serving on the council . . .

"There are many competent women on Vancouver Island who are involved in a wide range of activities and whose experience would be a valuable asset to any advisory council. Yet, quite naturally, these women, before making their names available, would require more information," Mrs. Grimmer said.

SWAG wrote asking for more information and received a "nebulous" reply dated June 1 — the day before council members were announced.

In her letter to Munro, Mrs. Grimmer states that this "shoddy handling of prior arrangements would seem to indicate that the desire to involve the public (in selecting the council) was simply an inefficient public relations job designed to create the illusion of concern."

She also criticizes the government for appointing only seven women's rights workers to the 28-member council. And for the fact that the seven women have been appointed for only one-year terms. Other members have been appointed for two or three-year terms.

"Appointing members who have no apparent interest in the status of women may be convenient for the government but it will hardly satisfy the women who suffer discrimination," Mrs. Grimmer says.

Mrs. Grimmer claims "the paltry budget" provided for the council is evidence that the government wants an "impotent council."

"This council, hampered by inadequate expertise, experience, concern and resources, can hardly be expected to produce much intelligent input to government legislation," the letter states.

The council's composition was also sharply criticized by delegates attending a Women for Political Action conference in Toronto June 17.

At that time one of the male appointees was quoted as saying he didn't know why he had been selected for the council but thought perhaps it was because he tries "to keep an open mind."

Abortion Issue Puts Medics In Centre

WASHINGTON (UPI) — Caught between militant abortion advocates and a growing "right to life" movement, the medical community is seeking a morally neutral but medically affirmative response to abortion.

Such a response, according to the president of the Rockefeller Foundation, Dr. John Knowles, is necessary because of the U.S. Supreme Court's January decision overturning most anti-abortion laws.

The court ruled at that time that the public interest in abortion lies only in ensuring maximum safety for women who choose abortions.

But Knowles, writing in the current issue of Family Planning Perspectives — the technical journal of the Planned Parenthood Federation of America — said the present "free market" approach to providing access to abortions will not meet the court's injunction to ensure the best standards of medical safety.

"It remains for the individual to decide whether or not to seek an abortion, on the basis of her own moral or religious beliefs and values," said Knowles, who also served as a general director of Massachusetts General Hospital.

He said the government and the health system, however, "clearly are responsible" for making sure abortions take place "under the best medical circumstances."

As a result of the Supreme Court decision, there will be an estimated 1.2 to 1.8 million legal abortions in the United States every year. Many people contend that neither the government nor the health system need take any action in the face of the court decision.

But Knowles said that while "laissez faire" attitudes "may be adequate for selling soap and cars . . . they are certainly not adequate for providing health services."

"The free market has not provided accessible services to the poor, it has not stressed those services with a high benefit to cost ratio, and it has emphasized ability to pay, rather than need, as the prime determinant for receipt of services," he said.

If the free market approach to abortion is followed, he said, the result would be that while the more affluent, educated and best informed will have access to abortions, "inner-city women, and even more so, the rural poor, may find themselves without services . . . for years to come."

". . . Without an informed public policy and an effective action program, the 'free market' will not be free at all, but will instead be subject to numerous constraints, most of them political and discriminatory," Knowles said.

While calling for a co-ordinated government program, however, Knowles stressed that both the government and the health delivery system should maintain a morally neutral stance.

"A pluralistic society need not encourage or discourage abortions, but should seek to make sure that those who need and want them can get them, and that all abortions be performed as early as possible," he said.

The government response, he said, should include establishment of licensed non-profit outpatient facilities, a public education program, free or low-cost pregnancy detection services and the extension of family planning services.

"Without detailed planning," Knowles said, "it is predictable that political and economic factors will be more influential than medical ones in determining what the health system does."

Is Unit-Pricing Glitter or Gold?

TORONTO (CP) — Unit-pricing may be more glitter than gold — an idea with more superficial appeal than substantial advantage, according to Dr. W. H. Mahatoo, chairman, marketing area, Faculty of Business, McMaster University.

Writing in the current issue of Executive magazine, Mahatoo, who lectures on consumer research and consumer behavior, says unless quality can be equated, unit-pricing is not very helpful. He says only a few consumers use it and then only to compare prices on items such as household detergents and fruit and vegetable juices.

He said the Consumers' Association of Canada may be on "questionable ground" when it calls for legislated unit pricing on all supermarket items. "They could very well be defeating their own purpose by contributing to, rather than reducing, food prices."

"It would be unfortunate if such a recommendation were adopted without carefully checking its validity and implications. Not only would the consumer have to pay for it (however small, in percentage terms, it turns out to be) but few people would be likely to make use of it, and only for a few items at that," the article states.

Mahatoo raised several questions concerning the CAC request: "What kind of consumer data is recommendation based on? And how adequate is that information likely to be?", "Is unit-pricing useful?"; "What cost does the policy incur and, therefore, what impact would it have on food prices."

He pointed out that 90,000 voluntary members of the CAC represent a certain type of individual — "the vocalist, the activist, the more articulate, the better educated — hardly a representative cross-section of Canadians.

". . . Has it (the CAC) collected systematic representative data from consumers which indicate a widespread need and desire for unit-pricing? Or is this recommendation the result of the subjective appraisal of the associations' executive who are making the assumption (not uncommon in business) that the majority of Canadians think as they do?"

Mahatoo pointed out that research studies made in 1971 and 1972 indicate that less than 10 per cent of shoppers use unit-pricing. Some of these studies have lasted up to four months.

He also lists some possible reasons — cards are hard to read; difficulty in identifying unit-price; stoop-to-read lower shelf locations; over-abundance of cards and difficulty in determining card for package.

"Added to this is the question of how easy the average consumer finds it to compare figures with two decimal places. Often, in a shopping context, dollar and cent signs are omitted so that a number such as 1.71 is automatically viewed as $1.71 and confusion results. Furthermore, the average consumer is not really capable of reading the difference between two such numbeds in a meaningful way," said Mahatoo.

WHEELER SPINS GOLD

HAMILTON (CP) — Twenty-six-year-old Hilda May Binns of Hamilton has won 12 gold medals in international competition and holds three world records.

With these successes why isn't she a celebrity? Hilda May is crippled from the waist down—a victim of polio—and her athletic triumphs have come in wheelchair competitions.

She spent a year in hospital after contracting polio as a nine-year-old. When she returned home she was treated as "just another" one of the six May children.

"My mother didn't spoil me," Hilda recalls. "She forced me to crawl around the house to develop my leg muscles. I had to climb up and down the stairs on my bottom to get to my bedroom.

Last summer she was part of the Canadian team at the Para-Olympics at Heidelberg, Germany. Although she did not win a medal, the Canadian team won nine golds, finishing sixth among the 44 competing nations.

Mrs. Binns now has retired to concentrate on coaching and on drawing more paraplegics into these competitions.

She and her husband, David, who is also a polio victim, promote sports activities for handicapped persons through their club, the Steel City Wheelers.

Mrs. Binns feels that wheelchair sports, as well as giving a person a sense of worth, provide an outlet for pent-up emotions.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22) This is your lucky month. Venus and Mercury occulted in your Solar mid-heaven. You get high praise in your little sensation — a coat and dress of matte jersey, sweeping the floor.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22) Your popularity builds up steadily this month. And so it should — in this evening coat of fine wool in smashing red (a color that is new for blondes). Put it over a printed silk dress that is splashed with scarlet and black. Now you have interested the people that matter the most.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21) You wear ultra-chic clothes with exactly the right nonchalance. You're quite a dame and you're going places . . . in a buttonless leather shirt, a great checked pant from Sweden, a man tailored shirt and an Echo scarf. Venus arrived on your solar mid-heaven. You can finalise those holiday arrangements.

SAGITARIUS (November 22-December 21) The most attractive men around can't take their eyes off you —you have a passport for adventure wearing the softest muskrat coat, encased in blue fox, belted in back. Throw it over your pigskin pants and vest worn with a stock tied shirt and carry canvas and leather bags. This will be your lively month. Follow your stars.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19) Your planet is in the 10th House. Many invitations this month. Many surprises. Jupiter is in your sun sign. Start the party season in Gibson's very own sure-fire bodydress. It takes shape before your very eyes. ADD the new cool look of silver artwork by DePasiltie — hang it around your pretty neck. Color: alluring mid-nite blue. You'll be the beauty in the room.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18) You long to cut a dash socially. So do it. Wear a new coat from Sweden. Black, a star — the lifter-upper for you. Sharply tailored — wide shiny patent belt — no weight to it. Careful a lot of jealous friends show signs. You are going to like life in this coat.

PISCES (February 19-March 20) Mars in Pisces — gives you great money advantages. So go ahead indulge. Have the greatest shirt-coat you have ever owned. It's an explosion of plaid — orange, grey, brown. Short and swinging. A beautifully cut shirt. At the root of everything this year, there is a shirt.

ARIES (March 21-April 19) Your own Watergate is in your stars with an evening dress with matching coat in full length, not-too-cover-up jersey, daring enough to give you four more years with two off for good behaviour.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20) You will take the secretarial position in the rat race in a short jacket, collared, cuffed, shiny and leather from Paris for Gibson's only, of course.

Hindus called it "gem of gems" . . .

Diamonds — rubies — emeralds . . . Isn't that the way we always start off listing precious stones? . . . And the most exotic and fascinating of these is undoubtedly the ruby . . . which the ancient Hindus called the gem of gems . . . and which, also happens to be the birthstone for this month of July . . . On our visit to de Goutiere's the other day, Mr. de G. showed us several beautiful ruby and diamond rings which stirred us to the depths and made us feel like Marguerite in Faust! . . . One is a cluster with a single ruby surrounded with eight diamonds . . . Another, a circular cluster with a single ruby surrounded with eight diamonds . . . A third ring is a particularly fine deep red ruby with baguette diamonds, small round brilliants and a single marquis diamond set on one side . . . All of these are top quality rubies, in white gold settings . . . $425 up . . . There are several very nice modern dinner rings set with rubies and diamonds . . . and one lovely synthetic star ruby with two small diamonds in a modern sculptured gold setting . . . $125 . . . Turning from rubies to emeralds . . . we noticed a pair of beautiful emerald and diamond earrings . . . very fine emeralds in the shape of rosettes with ribbons of diamonds trailing off . . . Set in platinum, these are estate pieces . . . as are a platinum and diamond flower design pin . . . and some exquisite diamond rings in various sizes . . . de Goutiere Jewellers, Ltd., 2524 Estevan Ave., 592-8224.

Expert advice will save you money . . .

Heard of a lady the other day who'd purchased a condominium and proceeded forthwith to plan the changes she wanted made . . . color schemes for floors and walls . . . and so on and so forth . . . When she thought she had it all worked out, she suddenly paused before setting the wheels in motion . . . and decided it might be the better part of wisdom to let Interior Designer Peter Church pass judgement on her decisions . . . and what a blessing this turned out to be! . . . The poor lady would have had three fits if she'd seen her own furnishings in the decor she was thinking of! Even the color of the kitchen floor was wrong! . . . So here's our earnest advice to you: if you're planning on doing anything at all to your present home . . . or are movinng into an apartment that calls for renovation . . . call Mr. Church at Oak Bay Design Studio before you lift a finger . . . He'll take assignments on a fee basis and make you a long-range plan so you can have things done gradually . . . And don't be afraid . . . the cost won't be astronomical or even far out . . . In actual fact you'll not be spending money but saving money if you let Mr. Church know in time . . . He'll look at your furnishings . . . discuss your likes and dislikes . . . the way you live and entertain . . . and then make suggestions to tie everything together . . . for a beautiful . . . comfortable . . . welcoming home! . . . Serve Piping Meatloaf When Summer's Chilly

By MARY MOORE

This is no ordinary meat loaf. You make it in two steps so read the recipe through. If you start at 3 p.m. you can serve it at 6 p.m. OR better still prepare the first and longest step in the morning and refrigerate until 1 hour before serving time.

SURPRISE MEAT LOAF

Meat Loaf Mixture:
2 lbs. ground chuck beef
¾ c. fine dry bread crumbs or rolled oats
1-3 c. milk
½ c. catsup
1-3 c. milk
½ c. catsup
2 eggs
¾ c. finely chopped onion
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. garlic salt
1 tsp. Worcestershire sauce
Noodle Topping:
6 c. broad egg noodles (6 oz.) uncooked
6 tbsp. butter (divided—see below)
2 tbsp. flour
½ tsp. salt
¼ tsp. pepper
1 c. milk
1½ c. Cheddar cheese, shredded and packed parsley flakes.

To make Meat Loaf in large bowl break up ground chuck beef with fork. Add all remaining meat loaf ingredients and blend thoroughly. Pack meat mixture into a 9x5x2½ inch loaf pan. Bake at 375 deg. Fahr. for 50 minutes. Remove from oven and carefully pour off excess fat.

Meanwhile while meat is baking make the Noodle Topping. Cook noodles in large pot of salted, boiling water until tender. Drain thoroughly in colander. While noodles are cooking melt 2 tablespoons of the butter in a large pot. Remove from heat and blend in flour, salt and pepper. Gradually stir in the 1-cup milk. Cook over medium heat, stirring constantly, until smooth and thickened and mixture comes to boil. Stir in cheese until melted and well blended then stir in noodles until well coated with cheese sauce.

Cover and set aside to cool so you can handle the mixture.

Invert meat loaf out onto large shallow baking dish. Coat with noodle mixture carefully patting it on to sides and top of meat loaf. Cover tightly with wax paper and chill at least one hour in refrigerator before continuing. One hour before serving preheat oven to 350 deg. Fahr. Brush noodle-coating with remaining 4 tablespoons melted butter sprinkled with parsley flakes and bake 50 minutes longer. Slice. We served ours with broccoli.

Unwrap noodle overcoat and — surprise! Meatloaf!

Humor Flavors Lifestyle Of Centennarian

TORONTO (CP) — "The art of living is keeping busy," says Zoe Free who will be 100 years old this month.

In her centennial year she's busy taking the chair at society meetings working for several organizations, including the Conservative party and travelling.

"As long as I have the price of a cab I shall remain a gadabout," Mrs. Free said.

The first thing she does every morning is touch her toes without bending the legs. This helps ward off stiffness, she claims.

She has monthly medical check-ups and reports that her doctors "are delighted by my physical condition."

"The only thing wrong with me is my eyesight," she said.

"Reading is out and I need dark glasses to go out in the sunlight, but at least I can see and get about myself."

But predictably, this Victorian lady, born in Oxford, England, and an emigrant to Canada in 1881, is not enchanted with the youth and lifestyles of today.

"Life is too easy for them and there is far too much freedom," she said. "It was harder for us when I was young, but we were all the better for that. I think we had a higher standard of values."

For 25 years Zoe worked as a wardrobe mistress at Shea's Theatre in Toronto. She knew the theatrical great Lily Langtry and also met Toronto's Mary Pickford when Mary was six years old.

Zoe was honored for her public service in Canada when she attended a garden party at Buckingham Palace in 1936.

Today she is grandmother to 10 and is anticipating being a great-great-grandmother.

"Mother has always had a sharp sense of humor," her daughter Marjorie said. "She still likes dressing up, playing the mimic and getting up to mischief."

After the centennial celebrations she's off to Miami "if God spares me," she says.

In many ways Zoe Free was aptly christened—in Greek the name Zoe represents life.

dear abby

DEAR ABBY: I am in the air force. I am a married man, but I have spent more time away from my wife than with her because I have been stationed overseas in places where dependents are not permitted.

I love my wife with all my heart and nothing could ever change that. We have had a good marriage in which we have always said that we would be absolutely truthful with each other. Well, that is my problem. I have failed in my part of the agreement.

I have told my wife that she was the only woman I have ever had an affair with. That's a lie. Before I was married, I had an affair with a married woman. While I was overseas I had two "one-night-stands" with a different girl each time. They meant nothing to me. I can't even remember their names.

I have prayed for forgiveness and feel that Jesus has forgiven me, but I feel so guilty about lying to my wife. But if I told her the truth now she would never believe another word I said.

Should I confess these lies to her or not? Abby, you are the only person to whom I've told this. Now tell me, should I tell my wife? — Off My Chest.

DEAR OFF: No, no, no. Confessing to your wife would only make her unhappy. You've confessed to Jesus. That's enough.

DEAR ABBY: There is an unwritten law of ethics among hairdressers. One operator does not deliberately steal another operator's patrons. If the customer herself decides to switch of her own accord, fine and dandy. But for an operator to try to lure away a co-worker's best-paying or most interesting customers is unethical.

As a shop owner who is also a hairdresser I have seen some excellent operators fall victim to such piracy and consequently lose their self-confidence. By the time the owner of the shop becomes aware of what has happened, the offending operators have made themselves so valuable to the shop that the owner can't afford to fire them.

How are the victims to fight back? Nameless Out West.

DEAR NAMELESS: It's conceivable that a salesperson might successfully lure away a co-worker's customer. But it's highly unlikely that a hairdresser could "steal" a satisfied patron from a co-worker. If the patron can be "lured away," she's not satisfied, in which case it's her privilege to switch.

DEAR ABBY: I am a middle-aged woman with a problem I hope you won't think is too silly to answer. Every summer I visit my sister for a week. She has a lovely guest room, and I enjoy visiting her, but there is one annoyance.

In the hall just outside my bedroom door there is a grandfather clock which chimes on the half hour, and then again on the hour. These chimes keep me awake practically all night. I can't understand how my sister and her husband can sleep with that clock in the hall. When the chimes are silent, I am disturbed by the loud ticking.

I hate to complain to my sister, but I am dreading my next visit. Perhaps if you print this she'll get the hint. — "Tick, Tock, and Bong."

DEAR TICK: Here's your letter. And if that clock is still "ticktocking" and "bonging" when you arrive, ask your sister to please stop the clock for the duration of your visit.

DEAR ABBY: I am still chaffing over the doctor who wrote that he resents his parents for allowing him to be circumcised as an infant.

Point one: What mature person would harbor such resentment for a temporary discomfort that he can't even remember? And point two: If he knew his business, he would know that cervical cancer among women whose husbands are circumcised is far less frequent than among the others. Sign Me Glad.

CONFIDENTIAL TO "Tell Me The Truth: Some women in slacks should not turn their backs. You are one.

It is not easy to explain to a young child with asthma why he finds it difficult to breathe sometimes. The 24-page illustrated booklet "Willy and the Wheeze" is a clever little publication. It will help even very young children to understand the cause of their trouble and what they have to do to feel better.

The booklet tells about the visit of a mother and her asthmatic son to a physician. The somewhat difficult words that crop up during the conversation — like stethoscope, allergic, etc. — are explained in a charming way. Cartoon-like illustrations further facilitate understanding.

The youngster also learns how his lungs work and how dust and pollen can affect them. The boy is assured that he is not sick, but that he will have to be a bit more careful than children without asthma. He is also told that the doctor can do much to make him feel better, but that he will have to co-operate.

TATTOOS TAKE A NEW ROLE

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

There was the forgetful husband who had his wedding anniversary date emblazoned on his arm, and the sailor with I Hate the Navy printed on his forehead.

These are some of the new directions that the ancient art of tatooing is taking today.

Among other things, tatoos are being used for identification purposes on pets and livestock.

For several years, race horses have had identifying numbers tattooed inside their lips to prevent "fixing" a race by substituting a skillfully dyed horse for one originally entered.

Poultry farmers, plagued by thefts, have adopted the practice of branding their turkeys with tattoos under the wings to make recovery easier. Dog owners have begun putting registered marks or numbers inside their pets' ears, to foil dognappers.

Tattooing also has scientific and medical uses. American astronauts are tattooed with tiny dots to show just where electrical sensors should be attached to their skin.

Plastic surgeons use "invisible tatooing" to cover strawberry marks or other birthmarks that discolor a patient's face or neck. Flesh-colored pigments applied beneath the skin can cover benign tumors. This method can also hide facial scars and match the tones of skin grafts on war veterans and accident victims.

Tatooing dates back centuries. Tattoos dating from 4000 B.C. have been found on Egyptian mummies. And the frozen body of a tattooed Scythian chief who lived around 2500 B.C. was uncovered in a cave by Soviet archeologists.

It was long a tradition for seamen to commemorate their voyages with flamboyant tatoos. But proud military mottoes and time-honored praise of "mom" are giving way to protest symbols.

The sailor who had I Hate the Navy emblazoned on his forehead, was told to have it removed or face a court martial. Like others who have endured the stinging jabs of tatooers' needles, he found the adornment more painful and costly to take off than to put on.

Disaster Hits, Life Begins

By LEE LINDER

WILKES-BARRE, Pa. (AP) — Philip Walsh refused to abandon his home a year ago after floods spawned by tropical storm Agnes destroyed his beautiful riverside neighborhood.

"We became pioneers," said his wife, Roslyn.

Walsh, an elementary school principal, dumped their ruined possessions in the cracked, potholed Wilkes-Barre street, swiftly repaired and refurnished his home last summer, then deliberately added a fancy swimming pool.

"This area will be better than ever before," he said the other day, admitting it still resembled a bombed-out area in a war zone. "If I had any thoughts of the flood happening again, that the Susquehanna River could once more rise over the roof of my house, I wouldn't have put the work into my place that I did."

In Richmond, Va., where the James River flooded every Main Street business, clothier Isadore Cohen still isn't fixed up.

"The walls are still wet and I can't paint," the 71-year-old Cohen said. "I've stayed through three bad floods now, but I'll stick it out through another one before I decide whether to go."

Cohen is typical of the thousands of businessmen who suffered heavy losses and came back. And Walsh, the pioneer, no longer is unique among the approximately 29,000 families in 11 states, 20,305 of them in Pennsylvania, who were forced into temporary housing after the worst natural disaster in American history.

Two-thirds already are back home, and thousands of others —most still living rent-free in government-supplied trailers —are planning to rebuild battered residences or return to refurbished apartments.

"I think it will take another couple of years to get back to normal," said Charles Arcovitch, flood co-ordinator of Edwardsville, Pa., where a third of the town was wrecked. "Most of the people are in a hurry to get things back into shape, but it takes time, so much time, and so much money."

Agnes began in the Gulf of Mexico as 1972's first hurricane and slammed into the Florida coast on June 18, spawning 18 tornadoes and battering ships, homes, roads and bridges. Nine people died.

Then Agnes weakened, and was downgraded to a tropical storm as it whipped across Georgia, the Carolinas and Virginia, spewing torrential rains that flooded streams as far away as New York before swinging out into the Atlantic in the usual dying fashion of such summer weather systems.

But suddenly Agnes wheeled back to land and set a dangerous, erratic, curving course northwest that drowned the land from the mountains to the sea, from the Great Lakes back to Virginia.

The storm circled like a vulture June 23-24 over central and northeastern Pennsylvania—where death and destruction were the heaviest—and also hit New York, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia, New Jersey, West Virginia and the District of Columbia.

When the terrible week was over Agnes had:

—Killed 118 persons, 38 of them in Pennsylvania. Many were caught fleeing in autos, or in houses they refused to abandon.

—Forced 250,000 to evacuate homes, half in Pennsylvania, and today about 20,000 in 8,000 families are still in temporary housing.

—Damaged or destroyed 116,000 homes, 2,400 farm buildings, 5,800 businesses, 100 schools, 70 churches and synagogues, three colleges, five hospitals, 15 libraries and a million books, 150 bridges and thousands of miles of roads.

—Inundated 5,000 square miles of land with 28.1 trillion gallons of water from 13,500 miles of rivers and streams. This is enough to supply every man, woman and child in America with a bath a day for two full years.

As the cleanup and repair picks up steam today, the economy in the flooded regions generally is booming. Savings are 25 per cent higher and unemployment is down by nearly half.

HEARING LOSS IS A CRIME!

Good hearing is stolen from thousands of people by a tragic impairment called NERVE DEAFNESS. Slowly, so gradually you HARDLY KNOW it's happening, this "thief" steals your sensitivity to certain sound frequencies, making it difficult to understand words, reducing your general hearing acuity.

There is no known cure for this impairment, but for many people, there is help available.

For a great many people, one of the extraordinary electronic hearing aids by DAHLBERG Electronics may be of help. Today see if Dahlberg is your answer, because the real crime in hearing loss is ignoring the problem, or trying to "live with it," rather than making every effort to find help.

These Patriots Head For Sect Showdown

By LARRRY HEINZERLING

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — African patriots seem headed for a showdown with Jehovah's Witnesses who don't believe in saluting flags or singing national anthems.

The religious sect's beliefs clash sharply with the increasingly strident nationalism of black African states.

While the sect is small it has angered politicians from Malawi to Nigeria and Kenya to Cameroon where its members have been banned, persecuted or publicly vilified.

It is mainly the refusal of the Witnesses to become involved in national political life that has provoked trouble.

The sect, whose belief centres on the doctrine of the second coming of Christ, regards governments as the work of Satan and refuses to salute flags or sing national anthems.

Founded in the United States in 1878, the Jehovah's Witnesses were known before 1931 as Russellites, after Charles Taze Russell. who organized them.

A few months ago in Nigeria's Mid-West State, some 30 children were expelled from school for refusing to sing the national anthem or salute the flag.

The church-state conflict has been considerably sharper in other African nations.

Late last year about 10,000 Jehovah's Witnesses were reported to have fled into Zambia, from Malawi.

The flood of refugees, according to published reports, followed attacks mounted against the sect by the Young Pioneers, the young wing of the Malawi Congress party.

Some reports, denied by Malawi, said about 60 Witnesses were killed.

The group was repatriated later amid a flurry of denials by Malwai's president, Kamuzu Banda, that any persecution had taken place.

STOPS FUND-RAISING

Banda said they fled "because they had been misled by their fanatical and ignorant leaders who had told their followers that God was about to destroy Malawi—as at Armageddon—and that to escape His wrath they must flee the country."

President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia, was reported to have used the country's security powers to stop the sect's house-to-house appeals for funds.

In Cameroon, the Witnesses were banned after thousands of them abstained in presidential elections in 1970.

But despite the opposition of President Ahmadu Ahidjo, a Moslem, the sect continues to operate underground in that country.

In April, they were banned in Kenya where they were branded "dangerous" to good government.

In June, Gen. Idi Amin's government in Uganda banned the Jehovah's Witnesses and 10 other religious sects which were described as being dangerous to peace and order.

President Mobutu Sese Seko of Zaire also has effectively banned the Jehovah's Witnesses, insisting that all Protestant churches and sects worship under the umbrella of the Church of Christ in Zaire, formerly The Congo.

One published report puts the total figure in black Africa at 260,000, with about 10,000 in Cameroon, 14,000 in Zaire, 15,000 in Ghana, 22,000 in Malawi, 86,000 in Nigeria, 12,000 in Rhodesia, 24,000 in South Africa, 56,000 in Zambia and several other thousands in Kenya, Uganda and Tanzania.

The sect's adherents maintain a rigid discipline and the movement appears to be gaining increasing popularity, especially in West Africa.

"You cannot find a Jehovah's Witness in the prisons," says one member of the sect in Lagos. "We are never arrested for stealing or for armed robbery or for any other social vices that are prevalent in our society."

But continued conflict with Africa's governments seems inevitable since, as one Jehovah's Witness put it, "It is only God we will worship and respect on this earth."

Storm Kills 3

MEXICO CITY (Reuter) — Three persons were killed Wednesday in a storm that caused flooding and cut off the city of Leon, 187 miles northwest of Mexico City, from the rest of the country, police said.

CBC Staff Sign Pact

MONTREAL (CP) — CBC production employees, salesmen, announcers, researchers and clerical staff across the country have voted to ratify a new two-year contract after five months of bargaining.

The 4,000 employees will receive monetary benefits ranging from 14½ per cent to 17¼ per cent, the Canadian Union of Public Employees said.

The contract includes basic salary increases of 7½ per cent and 6½ per cent over two years and increased CBC contributions toward health care costs.

All full-time employees on staff as of June 22 will receive lump-sum retroactive payments of $225.

Other areas in which the union said improvements were made include job security, car allowances and vacations.

A committee will study discrimination against women in the CBC's pension and group life insurance plans and the possibility of implementing a formula which allows employees to retire at full pension when their age and years of service total 85.

FAKE ART LURES

By BAYO ROTIBI

LAGOS, Nigeria (AP) — Most of Africa's cultural treasures were plundered in colonial days but the few leftovers still support a booming trade in stolen art objects.

Museums and private collectors in Europe and the United States hold large exhibitions of African antiquities while museums in Africa are virtually bare.

"These are replicas," explained a guide at the ancient museum of Abomey in northern Dahomey. He pointed to dusty tapestries on the wall. "All the originals were taken to Paris years ago."

Most of the exhibits at the tiny museum of Benin, Nigeria, once the centre of a great empire famous for its work in bronze, are replicas. Many of the originals are in London.

African youths home on vacation from schools in London or Paris sometimes go back to classes with stolen village artifacts.

Soaring demand in the United States and Europe for genuine African art objects has resulted in widespread fraud.

Collectors report that villagers bury new masks for a few months to give the appearance of age. Others roast masks in efforts to convince buyers that they were used in dances around a village fire.

"Want to see an ancient sword my grandfather once used?" a trader in Mali asked a tourist.

The tourist didn't buy. Later he learned that hundreds of similar swords are made from parts of junked cars.

THE FIFTH SCHOLASTICS
By William Goichberg
Director

The Fifth Annual United States Scholastic Chess Championships, played in May at the LaSalle Hotel in Chicago, had 1,074 participants — a U.S. record for players playing at the same time and place. (The 1972 Greater New York Congress had 1,487, but no more than about 900 of these were playing at one time.)

There were 485 players in the National High School Championship, 325 in the National High School Novice Championship and 264 in the new National Junior High School Championship.

Top-ranked Larry Christiansen of Riverside, California, (2377) repeated his 1971 victory in the National High School Championship, winning seven straight before drawing second-ranked Mark Diesen (2235) in the last round.

Evanston (Ill.) Township High School repeated as National High School Team Champions, but had to struggle through the hardest-fought team struggle ever, in marked contrast to their runaway of last year.

For the first time there is a National Junior High School Champion. He is Michael Rohde, an eighth grader from South Orange, N.J., who beat out New York's Lewis Cohen. Victory must have been sweet for Michael because only a few months ago Cohen had beaten him in two State championships.

BLACK'S BACKWARD QBP

A tough problem for Black is to get his QBP to B4. (Maybe that is the reason why the Sicilian Defence is played so often against 1. P-K4.) Years ago I wrote some special articles, with illustrated games, to show Black's weakness if he does NOT get his QBP developed to B4 at least. Grandmaster Paul Keres has maintained this for a long time. If you study his game, you will see he never EVER neglects to play P-QB4 against his opponent's 1. P-Q4 or 1. P-QB4 move. Here's what can happen when this precept is not followed:

Played in the Tenby, England, July 8, 1928 tourney.

Pollution to Progress . . .

By JEFF CARRUTHERS
(Special to The Times)

OTTAWA — After 50 years of searching, Canadian scientists have developed the type of product that many environmentally-conscious Canadians dream about: a double-barrelled adhesive that fights pollution and at the same time saves precious petroleum resources.

The adhesive is made from spent sulphite liquor, the molasses-like liquid produced in large quantities by sulphite fine-paper mills and normally dumped into the large river or lake.

And it promises to replace the more expensive phenolic resin adhesive that are made from petroleum and that are used in the production of exterior-grade waterproof waferboards.

The recycled sulphite liquor adhesive would cost about five cents a pound, compared to the present price of 25 cents a pound for the petrochemical resins, according to estimates of the Canadian Forestry Service. And the future prospects are for higher prices for the petrochemical resins.

Dr. K. C. Shen, the developer of the adhesive and a research scientist with the eastern forest products laboratory here, said Thursday that the new adhesive produces a waferboard which is as strong and as water-resistant as the present resin-bonded waferboard.

He said he is now working on ways to extend use of the new adhesive to plywoods, hardboard and laminated products

Waferboard, by the way, is considered to be plywood's biggest competitor these days, both for internal and external building use. Inside, particle board is widely used in kitchen cupboards and as the core for other wood furniture.

Outside, waferboard is now being widely used by capital-area home builders, as a sheathing material in place of more expensive plywood. Aluminum siding is to be placed on top.

Easier Drink Laws Eyed

CALGARY (CP) — General relaxation of Alberta liquor laws, including establishment of neighborhood pubs, brewers' retail beer outlets and a right for minors to drink when accompanied by parents, was recommended Friday by a special provincial government study.

In a report, the contents of which Attorney-General Merv Leitch said will find their way into way next year, a six-man committee appointed by the Cabinet warns against keeping tough blue-laws hanging over alcohol consumption.

"Our present liquor legislation has resulted in the creation of unfortunate drining habits in the province."

The committee says that it hopes that drinking may eventually become a secondary activity, and that licensed premises will become places for "companionship and enjoyable activities."

The committee, headed by Ron Ghitter (PC—Calgary Buffalo), wants revisions of most current Alberta licensing practices for lounges, bars and private parties.

And by opening up a whole range of new-style licensed premises — including small pubs and lounges, it suggests that drinking places can be converted into areas "where citizens can have fun instead of merely getting drunk."

Key recommenlations include switching responsibility for administering liquor laws to the minister of consumer affairs—a recognition, Mr. Ghitter told a news conference at which the report was released, that the government ought to cater to individual tastes and not to try to oppress them.

The Alberta Liquor Control Board would be abolished, and be replaced by a Beverage Control Board which would take over supervision of distribution of liquor and licensing.

One Cleric's Pet Peeves

• PERSPECTIVES AND PREJUDICES •

By REV. J. A. DAVIDSON

Recently I was with My Irritable Friend walking down the main street of the town in which he is a pastor, when a man greeted him with a casually cheery, "G'mornin', Reverend." M.I.F. responded with an equally casual and cheery, "G'mornin', George."

M.I.F.'s response puzzled me.

He dislikes being called plain "Reverend."

He subscribes to the orthodoxy which holds that "Reverend" is an adjective and should never be used alone or only with a surname as in "Reverend Pinkie", but only in this fashion, "Rev. Fred Grool" or .."Rev. J. P. Raddish." M.I.F. once said. "Beware of parishioners who call you plain 'Revereend': most of them think that ministers are paid too much.")

I asked him if he had suddenly changed his mind.

He said that no he hadn't changed his thinking on that great and momentous issue, but that he had given up fighting about it.

He does nothing to encourage this usage, he explained, and, unless someone asks him about it, nothing to stop it.

He said that he has also given up protesting the habit of some ecclesiastical secretaries of heinously listing ministers' names in this manner:

"Revs. Binks, Barmish, Rince-Bouche, etc." He added that he doesn't like coming across that sort of thing in reputable newspapers, the editors of which would as soon put turpentine in their yoghurt as run a story about members of the federal cabinet with "Hons. Sharp, Turner, Lang, etc."

He told me that he didn't even let out a little whimper when at regional wingding of church ladies last year one of the hostesses said to a group of clergy who were there to participate in a panel discussion, "Will you reverends please come this way."

We then reminisced about an old friend of ours, a fellow minister who is known by some of brethren as "Thuh".

"Thuh" is a precision in ecclesiastical etiquette.

(He is very good, too, on the depth of clerical collars, the cut of cassocks, and embroidery on plorials.)

Early in his ministry his blood pressure would go up several points every time he received a letter addressed "Rev. Peter Grotch" instead of, in the proper way, "The Rev. Peter Grotch."

It was this quaint concern for the definite article that got him the nickname "Thuh".

He is now serving in another part of the country, and we haven't seen him for some years.

But M.I.F. thinks that old Grotchie is still pretty fussy about the little proprieties.

Four years ago, yielding sinfully to temptation, M.I.F. sent him a Christmas card addressed simply to "Rev. Grotch". He hasn't heard from him since.

"Well, anyway, g'bye, Reverend," I said as we parted. "Adios, Rev," he cheerily replied.

Aid Granted New School

The provincial government has agreed to assist the Greater Victoria School Board in equipping vocational training facilities for the new Saanich community secondary school.

The cost of the vocational facilities has been put at $780,000 by school board officials.

The cabinet said the government will "enter into an agreement to provide financial assistance to the board in defraying the capital cost" of the vocational facilities, but the government's share was not stated.

A-Waste Threat Denied in U.S.

By The Associated Press

An Atomic Energy Commission official in Richland, Wash., has flatly denied a charge that radio active waste from atomic reactors has been mismanaged.

However, the executive director of the Oregon Environmental Council urged a thorough investigation of AEC waste storage sites, including the Hanford, Wash., facility.

"I think AEC has been too lackadaisical," said council director Larry Williams in Portland.

"Their storage methods are far from exemplary."

A story published earlier this week contended that liquid waste mismanagement during the past three decades threatens to contaminate areas of the United States, endangering thousands of people.

In a survey environmentalists, state officials and others said the threat to thousands of people was overstated.

"I suppose you could say AEC has been lucky, but they also have been careful and skillful, too," said Dr. Forest Rieke, a Portland physician specializing in occupational medicine.

Fremling, contacted in Richland, said "AEC did not play down the risk."

He said the agency has no doubts waste leakage will lose any dangerous radioactivity before it reaches the underground water table.

Fremling said the commission hasn't determined how much soil should be removed to eliminate the problem of excessive plutonium in the storage trench at Hanford.

Removal of the excess will start in about two years and work will last 12 to 18 months, he said.

The Nuclear and Thermal Energy Council has been trying to get information from AEC on how much high-level radio-active waste will be transported through any part of Oregon as the new Trojan plant, Hanford and other nuclear power facilities begin operating within a few years.

The AEC would never allow the private nuclear industry to leak wastes as has occurred at AEC facilities, one person said.

Larry Bradley, head of nuclear energy development for the state of Washington, said in Olympia, "nothing is ever certain, but the storage at Hanford has been relatively safe.

Decision Reserved On Union Bid

WINNIPEG (CP) — The Manitoba Labor Board has reserved decision on an application by the Newspaper Guild for certification as bargaining agent for editorial and advertising employees of the Free Press.

The board also heard requests from the newspaper and two editorial employees that a formal pre-certification vote be held, and that it include a choice of whether editorial staff wish to be represented by a separate bargaining unit.

The Guild applied for certification May 28, declaring it had signed more than 86 per cent of the 88 editorial and 89 advertising employees.

Guild counsel Mel Myers said a vote was unnecessary because there was no evidence of deceit or inducement towards employees who signed.

In asking for separate editorial and advertising units, reporter Dudley Magnus and columnist Shaun Herron said interests of the two groups were incompatible.

Canada Eases Deadline On Flight Checkings

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Canada will be quite willing to extend beyond the July 29 deadline, the cutoff date for terminating United States preclearance at Canadian airports for travellers to the U.S.

Transport Minister Jean Marchand has indicated to the Commons that if the Canadian government feels that the general negotiations in the bilateral air talks can be successful, this country would be prepared to extend the period agreed upon for putting an end to preclearance.

He was commenting on reports emanating from Washington that the U.S. and Canada are on the verge of agreeing in principle to continue the U.S. customs preclearance.

Marchand declined to confirm the reports. He told the House that the U.S. and Canadian negotiators are at "exactly the same point as when the question was last put to me." That was in June.

The bilateral air talks which opened in Ottawa late in May terminated June 1. It had been expected they would be resumed in Ottawa the week of June 4 but they were adjourned and are now scheduled to resume in Washington July 16.

MOUNTIE HONOR WINS FAME AT CITY GAMES

First place trophies to be presented at the Pacific International Games at Centennial Stadium this weekend have been designed to do more than just please the winner.

Detective Lou Truesdale of Victoria City Police and Saanich Peninsula Jaycees has featured the silver dollar honoring the RCMP centennial in his design for the first place trophy.

Ferguson said this was the first time a Canadian coin had been incorporated into an international trophy and mint officials were pleased.

Truesdale, a former Mountie, says he had two objectives in mind when he designed the trophies.

He wanted an attractive trophy — and a means of "spreading the fame of Canada's unique police force."

The games today and Sunday from 1:30 to 5 p.m. are sponsored by the Saanich Peninsula Jaycees and Invictus, a local co-ordinating body for track and field events.

N-TUGS EYED FOR WATER

WASHINGTON (AP) — Two United States government scientists say future drinking-water shortages may be met by sending nuclear-powered tug-boats to polar regions to bring huge icebergs back to coastal cities.

The icebergs could then be melted to form ready sources of fresh water, they said. The scientists said "super" tugs could tow icebergs 80 stories high and as wide as two football fields from Antartica to drought areas in Australia and South America.

"It's an exciting possibility," said Dr. Wilford Weeks of the Army Cold Regions Research Laboratory and Dr. William Campbell of the U.S. Geological Survey, in a report issued by the Interior Department.

They said towing icebergs from the Arctic to Northern hemisphere cities seemed less feasible because the Arctic's cathedral-like icebergs would present a tougher haul.

In addition to this potential for remedying water shortages, the enormous icebergs could also be used to counter thermal pollution, the scientists suggested.

U.S. Exports Squeeze B.C. Fruit Producers

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

The world-famous fruit trees of the Okanagan Valley are virtually bursting with cherries these days, but the men who raise this popular crop are not sure if their large production is such a good thing.

They are finding the factors which have led to their best production year since 1967 were not enjoyed exclusively in B.C. this season, and until recently they've been on the wrong end of a cost-price squeeze which has seen the market advantage swinging to the faster-ripening American crop.

Officials of the B.C. Tree Fruits marketing agency told the Times Thursday that their latest estimates have the B.C. cherry crop this year pegged at about 480,000 crates, almost double the size of last year's rain-damaged production, which measured only 265,000 crates. A crate constitutes 20.5 pounds.

Below the border, things are going even better than that, especially in Washington. In fact, U.S. cherry growers, finding themselves burdened with large volumes over and above the amounts they are able to dispose of on their own domestic markets, turned their glances northwards to the B.C. market.

The Americans have a distinct advantage over their B.C. counterparts where cherries are concerned since the American fruit is ready for picking and marketing well before the B.C. crop is ready.

And so, when the first B.C. cherries went onto the market earlier this season, they were fetching only about $6.35 per crate, meaning that the B.C. producers were taking a loss since they need about $7 per crate in order to meet their costs of production.

The Americans, on the other hand, were willing to let their cherries go for as little as $5 per crate because their B.C. revenue amounts to extra cash after the bumper crop they managed to harvest.

At this point, representatives of the B.C. tree fruit industry appealed for government help in the face of the extra-tough American competition and the size of the crop they know they are going to have to dispose of.

Effective midnight last Friday, the federal government imposed a surcharge on the U.S. cherries which stipulated that the American product could not be sold in Canada for less than 35 cents per pound, or about $7.17 per crate. The B.C. government came through with a continuation of its campaign to have British Columbians buy B.C. produce and provincial fruit buyers responded by getting their supplies from domestic growers instead of buying from the less-costly American crop.

At the present time, cherries are selling at a retail price ranging on the average from 45 to 49 cents per pound, say the industry spokesmen, a price which is seeing the B.C. grower getting a reasonable return on his costs of production.

In comparison to the price of cherries last year, when production was cut by rain damage, this year's retail price per pound is substantially lower. Last year, B.C. cherries were being wholesaled for $8 per crate.

Up to last week, 192,000 crates of cherries—40 per cent of the estimated final production—have been sold.

Art Robinson, information officer for B.C. Tree Fruits, said marketing is going smoothly with the season's first heavy shipments going out Saturday to Saskatchewan. Other good markets in Eastern Canada are yet to be exploited, he said.

However, Robinson said substantial damage has already been done by the American growers' inroads on the B.C. market earlier this season. Had the federal government acted more quickly with its surcharge, "it could have saved us a lot of dollars," Robinson said.

Compounding the problem from the point of view of the B.C. producers is the stated intention of a breakaway group of fruit growers to ship about 1,100 crates of their own cherries from the Okanagan to Vancouver to market themselves, instead of working through the marketing agency of the B.C. Fruit Growers Association.

The splinter group, made up of about 125 growers, is called the United Fruit Growers.

"We aim to bring economic reality to the Okanagan," says group president Hans Rhenisch. "We want to return the cost of production to the producer."

The United Fruit Growers plan to bring their cherries down from the Okanagan in a 40-vehicle caravan Saturday.

But according to Agriculture Minister Dave Stupich and B.C. Fruit Board chairman Nigel Taylor, the cherries moved by the group will be subject to seizure since the cherry marekting scheme is written into the provincial legislation.

Rhenisch counters that the United Fruit Growers will take the fruit board to court if their cherries are seized.

In the meantime, the legislature's select standing committee on agriculture has been studying the exact problem of tree fruit marketing practices and is to make recommendations to the legislature this fall.

Until then, say the industry spokesmen, marketing procedures will continue as they have for years.

When the majority of tree fruit growers is prepared to request a change in the way the fruit is marketed, says Stupich, growers' proposals will be listened to.

The minister, in condemning the actions of the splinter United Fruit Growers, says that time has not yet come.

Weddings

Dunstan — Patterson

Campbell River United Church formed the setting for the wedding of Theresa Rae (Terry), daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Patterson, Campbell River, to Mr. Sidney George (Butch) Dunstan, son of Mr. and Mrs. S. G. Dunstan of Victoria. Reverend James Ford officiated on June 9, at 6 p.m. Attending the bride were Alicia Carroll as maid of honor, Tammy McConkey, flower-girl, and Shawn McConkey, ring-bearer. The groom was attended by Mr. Terry Gavin of Sidney, as best man, ushers were Terry Dunstan, brother of the groom, and Grant Patterson, brother of the bride.

Following a honeymoon on the Island, Mr. and Mrs. Dunstan are residing in Campbell River, where the groom is employed with Erickson Construction.

Vizner — Ferguson

A beautiful wedding took place in St. John's Church, Victoria, on May 5, when Reverend Peter Switzer heard Diane, only daughter of Dave and Florence Ferguson, exchange wedding vows and rings with Jerry, only son of Karl and the late Kay Vizner.

The bride was radiant as she came down the aisle on the arm of her father. Her full-length dress of white nylon chiffon over bridal crepe, was delicately trimmed from neckline to hem with daisies enchain and mauve satin ribbon. Her veil of illusion net fell gently from a cap of satin and seed pearls to a full train and was completely edged with a dainty daisy chain. She carried a white Prayer Book topped with a purple orchid and white stephanotis. The three attendants wore identical Princess-style gowns, matron of honor, Mrs. Lynne Hoadley, in white Swiss dot over purple nylon, and bridesmaids, Miss Lynne McLeod and Miss Noelle French, cousin of the bride, in white Swiss dot over mauve nylon. All wore floppy hats and carried fan-shaped bouquets of yellow carnations. The groom was attended by Jim Buyse as best man, Lyle Ferrie and the bride's brothers, Don Ferguson and Dwayne Ferguson, ushered guests to their seats. Chris Hopkins sang O, Perfect Love during the signing of the Register.

A reception was held at Gordon Head Rec Centre, where 100 guests enjoyed dancing. Chris Hopkins, accompanied on the piano by his young son Ken, sang Love Story to the happy couple and Ed Barnes proposed the toast to the bride. The bride's cake was a masterpiece of beauty as twin white doves hovered over the three tiers, tastefully decorated with purple and yellow roses. Its elegance was enhanced by the lighted water fountain which the entire cake rested upon. After a delicious smorgasbord supper, the bride changed to a lemon yellow pant suit for going away on a honeymoon through the States.

Garrett — Bates

Saint Luke's Church was the site of a lovely wedding on Friday, June 22, 1973, at 7 p.m., when Deborah Jane, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. R. Bedford Bates, 3824 Epsom Drive, exchanged vows with Lawrence John, eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. John F. Garrett, 1000 Ridgeway Place. Pink snapdragons and mauve chrysanthemums decorated the altar for the double-ring ceremony solemnized by Archdeacon C. E. F. Wolff and Father B. Hanley.

The bride wore a floor-length Chantilly lace gown and her grandmother's Brussels net veil and orange blossom headpiece. She carried a colonial bouquet of red delight roses and baby's breath. Maid of honor, Miss Colleen Bates, and bridesmaid, Miss Dianne Garrett, wore identical gowns of pink floral print along with wide-brimmed hats trimmed with floral material. Each attendant carried a colonial bouquet of pink roses, mauve chrysanthemums and baby's breath. Best man was Mr. Chris Foster, and Messrs. Ron Holmes and Kevin Bates seated the guests.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held at the Olde England Inn. The evening ended with the departure of the happy couple for their honeymoon up-island. On return they will make their home in Victoria.

Gaddes — Watson

Reverend J. Rae Allan officiated at a double-ring ceremony in St. Aidan's United Church, on June 16, 1973, when Catherine Merle, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Watson, Wende Road, exchanged vows with Mr. Neill Gaddes, son of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Gaddes, of Cedar Hill Road.

The bride was given in marriage by her father and was attended by Sara Gaddes, sisters of the groom, and Kendra Watson, niece of the bride. The best man was Alan Mettrick of Calgary, and the ushers were Donald Watson and Gregory Middleton.

Following the ceremony, a reception was held in the Queen's Banquet Room of the Queen Victoria Inn. Mr. Leslie Staples proposed the toast to the bride.

After a wedding trip to California, Mr. and Mrs. Gaddes will make their home in Calgary.

Out of town guests included friends and relatives of the young couple from Courtenay, Nanaimo, Vancouver, Merritt, Roger's Pass and Calgary. Among these was Kenneth Sakamoto, Calgary photographer who took pictures of the bridal party.

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The U.S. government has proposed stiff restrictions on driving, parking and in some cases gasoline consumption in 11 more urban areas to clean up their air, similar to ones announced three weeks ago for New York, Los Angeles and 17 other areas.

State and local authorities now have 60 days to reply. Then the Environmental Protection Agency, which announced the restrictions Friday, could require the localities to put them into effect, in some cases beginning as early as a year from now.

In a related action, EPA Friday ordered U.S. airplane manufacturers to begin by 1979 making airplane engines which meet standards for reduced air pollution.

ELFORD HOPEFUL ON THETIS PARK

Recreation and Conservation Minister Jack Radford is "extremely interested" in protecting Thetis Lake Park and may persuade the provincial government to part with th necessary funds, Oak Bay Mayor Frances Elford said Friday.

Mrs. Elford, chairman of the Capital Region District's parks committee, said the provincial government is aware of the urgent need to acquire 245 acres of privately-owned watershed acreage north of the park so that the land can be fully protected from ecological damage.

Provincial representatives have already held talks with the owners, she said, and the government is considering a number of possible ways of helping the regional district to acquire the property.

The owners themselves appear to be holding out for the best possible price and "a little bit of poker" is involved, Mrs. Elford said. But she is optimistic about the outcome.

Meanwhile, she said she welcomes the initiative last week by the city of Victoria, which owns Thetis Lake Park, indicating city council's willingness to dedicate the park and turn it over to the regional district provided perimeter land is acquired on a regional-provincial basis and also dedicated.

"I think this is a wonderful step in the right direction and one that will probably bring about a solution to the problem fairly quickly," she said.

For some years Victoria has tried to free itself from the commitment of maintaining — at an estimated cost this year of over $25,000 — a park which the city feels should properly be a regional responsibility.

But until last week the method of transferring the park to the regional district's jurisdiction had always been a contentious issue.

When the transfer does take place, the city expects to continue managing the park under an agreement with the regional district.

Sihanouk Pleads For Arms

Times News Services

PEKING — Prince Norodom Sihanouk Friday issued an impassioned appeal for support for his forces in Cambodia and, in effect, rejected a negotiated peace with the embattled Cambodian government.

The need for military supplies was the principal theme of a banquet speech in which the exiled Cambodian leader repeated his categorical refusal to negotiate a compromise solution to the Cambodian problem and demanded that the United States and its Indochina allies cease all interference in Cambodia.

Both Sihanouk and his banquet host, Chinese Premier Chou En-Lai, bitterly condemned the use of South Vietnamese troops in support of the government of President Lon Nol, which is faced with the prospect of a cutoff of U.S. bombing support Aug. 15.

Fruit Convoy Threat

By BRIAN BUTTERS
Times Staff

The leader of a breakaway group of Okanagan Valley cherry growers expects that his group's efforts to market its own products in Vancouver this weekend will be squashed almost before the campaign gets off the ground. (See also Page 33.)

Hans Rhenisch, president of the 120-member United Fruit Growers, a splinter group broken off from the giant B.C. Fruit Growers Association, said Friday he has received information that the 40-vehicle caravan leaving Keremeos this morning, laden with cherries bound for the Vancouver market, will be halted by the RCMP.

Rhenisch said the RCMP told him it will be obligated to follow the direction of the B.C. Fruit Board, which has the legislative power to order the United Fruit Growers' cherries seized.

However, Rhenisch said that if the cherries — 11 tons is the anticipated payload — are seized, the UFG will immediately go to the nearest RCMP office and file a charge of theft against the B.C. Fruit Board to challenge the legality of the B.C. Food Marketing Act.

Agriculture Minister David Stupich Thursday condemned the actions of the UFG and said it is jeopardizing the marketing system long used by the B.C. Fruit Growers Association.

But Rhenisch's group is determined to demonstrate that Okanagan producers are able to obtain a reasonable return on their production costs at the same time that cherries are made available to the consumer at lower prices than are now offered.

The retail prices for the UFG cherries, if they ever reach the Vancouver retailers this weekend, are expected to be 35 to 38 cents a pound in bulk amounts, 40 cents a pound for 20-pound crates and 45 cents a pound for three-pound amounts and less.

By comparison, Rhenisch says, cherries marketed by the B.C. Fruit Growers Association are selling for a minimum of 49 cents a pound to the consumer.

He says the UFG growers are able to offer this lower price to the consumer because of the elimination of many of the "middle-man" costs such as brokerage and shipping.

Rhenisch said production costs for the grower is 30 cents a pound. But when the marketing agency adds as much as 10 cents a pound for "middle-man" costs, Rhenisch added, the consumer ends up paying much more than he should. He said it is not unusual for consumers to pay as much as 69 or 79 cents a pound for cherries at corner stores and markets.

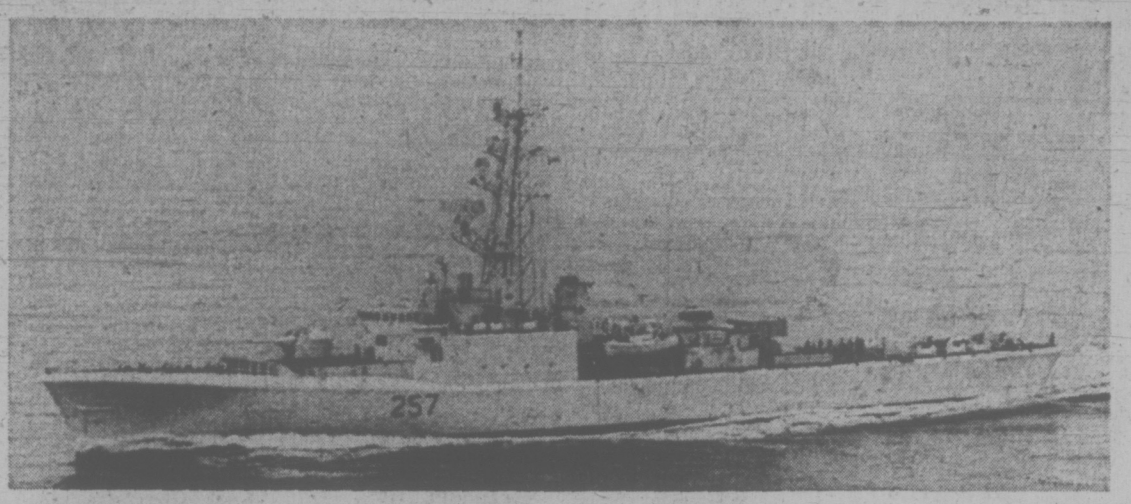
"This is a political move, but we have to go this way to make our point," he said, adding that the group is aiming for the establishment of a fruit marketing commission which would be able to bypass the unnecessary and costly practices of the B.C. Fruit Growers Association.



MANNED by an Esquimalt-based crew, HMCS Restigouche left Halifax Thursday and will arrive at CFB Esquimalt Aug. 1. She will become part of the Second Canadian Destroyer Escort Squadron joining Gatineau, Terra Nova, Kootenay and MacKenzie. Commander R. J. Deluca is captain of the Restigouche.

Gromyko Plan Ends Impasse

HELSINKI (CP) — The first phase of the European security conference ended today after Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko stepped in to provide a compromise that enabled the foreign ministers to agree to a communique.

The communique, noting the desire of Malta and Spain to air the views of Algeria and Tunisia, stated that "no consensus was reached for the time being."

Malta wanted the conference to consider Mediterranean and Middle East issues. Canada, for one, insisted these should not be raised without the inclusion of other views, such as Israel, to ensure that there would be no discrimination.

For the period there was the possibility that no communique would be issued because of disagreement but informants said Gromyko stepped in with a compromise formula on the wording which allowed the communique to sail through.

Many delegates felt that allowing the two North African countries to speak would embroil the conference in the Middle Eastern feuding.

STOP HIJACKS: EVERYBODY NUDE

TORONTO (CP)—Airline passengers have made countless suggestions on ways to stop air piracy ranging from sleeping gas to trapdoors, a United States government official told the International Association of Insurance Counsels' convention Friday.

However, the only cure-all proposal submitted, said James M. Yohe, deputy director of the Federal Aviation Administration, "is that all passengers would board in the nude so they couldn't carry weapons aboard."

One person said we should pump sleeping gas into the plane to put all the passengers, including the hijacker, asleep," he said, adding the only problem with the suggestion is that the gas might kill passengers with heart or respiratory ailments.

"Another one suggested we have a trapdoor at the cockpit," Yohe said. "The pilot would press a button and out the hijacker would go."

He was quick to point out that those who suggested this scheme were not as heartless as would appear. They also made provisions for the stringing of nets under the plane to save the ejected hijacker for trial.

TUG SAVES CRUISER

NANAIMO (CP) — The 42-foot express cruiser Finally almost had its final moments Friday when it all but sank after hitting a deadhead in Northumberland Channel.

The boat was going down when cries for help by the people on board were heard by workmen on the waterfront at Harmac pulp mill.

On board were Mr. and Mrs. Larry Paradis, and the Gordon Anderson family, of Kirkland, Wash.

There was a large hole in the bottom of the boat. The fast-flowing leak swamped the motor almost immediately and the boat began to sink.

The boat is valued at more than $40,000. There were no injuries.

Wonderful World of Animals

DEAR DR. MILLER: A friend of mine who has some great film on beavers building a dam said there is no way to tell the difference between beavers. I mean between the sexes. Why is this? — I.A.

DEAR I.A.: Agreed, there is no way you are going to determine this on the film. A double fold of tissue maintains perfect privacy for this personal area. Obviously a cooperatin adult beaver would be hard to find, so closer inspection of the area would be difficult. If that were possible, the difference between the male and female on visual inspection would be that the male has four visible openings beneath the tail, the female has five!

★ ★ ★

DEAR DR. MILLER: Nutmeg, our cat, likes to dawdle over her food. She eats a bite or two, goes away, comes back and does the same thing. This goes on all day. She even does this with her favorite food, roast chicken. Is this bad for a cat? —S.F.

DEAR S.F.: Nutmeg's nibbling is normal. The average house cat's hesitation when it comes to food is just the opposite of the average member of the canine clan, who tends to gulp its food in as few bites as possible. The only real hazard to your cat's dainty dawdling is related to high summertime temperatures when food, if it is potentially spoilable, may just do that if it sits out for an entire day. Better to offer three or four small meals throughout the day rather than have the food sit there long enough to spoil sufficiently to cause food poisoning.

Dear Dr. Miller: Laddie, terrier, loves chocolate as much as I do so usually I share mine with him. This time, though, he helped himself while I was gone and consumed the rest of the bagful. When I got home, he was looking sheepish and sickish and had thrown up several times but he's feeling better now. If the sneaky little tyke pulls this stunt again, what would be the best thing to give him for his upset stomach? — J. Mc.G.

Dear J. McG.: Laddie's luck might not hold next time. Better not count on it anyway. Instead, be sure any chocolate is stored so it's absolutely inaccessible to Laddie. Theobromine, an ingredient of chocolate, is a heart and kidney stimulant; an overdose could be fatal. Chocolate-consuming canines have gorged themselves into eternity by binges such as this. Don't let Laddie join them.

SOLUTION TO LAST WEEK'S PUZZLE

KLEMPERER

ZURICH — Symphony conductor Otto Klemperer died at his home here Friday night, it was announced today. He was 88.

An unidentified woman at his house said he died of natural causes.

Klemperer had been unconscious for about a week and died in his sleep, the spokesman said.

He was replaced as principal conductor of London's new Philharmonia Orchestra in March this year after 14 years.

Last year he announced his decision to retire, saying he could no longer stand the strain of concert performances.

But, following the success of a Beethoven series on television, he later agreed to conduct a further series with the Philharmonia, of which he was honorary president.

Born in Breslau, Germany, May 14, 1885, Otto Klemperer was a giant in every way. His six-foot five-inch frame dwarfed such contemporary musicians as Schoenberg, Toscanini and Kleiber.

LOS ANGELES — Actor James Cagney, who made his last film in 1961, will come out of self-imposed seclusion next March to receive the American Film Institute's Life Achievement Award.

It will be Cagney's first major public appearance since he starred in One, Two, Three 12 years ago.

NEW YORK — Aleksandr Solzhenitsyn, the Nobel prize-winning novelist, has received two letters threatening him with "very, very terrible" consequences if he does not pay $100,000 to the anonymous extortionists, according to dissident sources in Moscow.

The first letter demanded that he leave the money in a certain place. The second letter said, in effect, "you did not take our first letter seriously. That was a mistake. If you do not give us the money by July 9, it will be very, very terrible to think of what might happen to you."

MURFREESBORO, Ark. — Mrs. Robert Bland of Arlington, Tex., paid $2 to dig around in the crater of Diamonds State Park. Officials said her find was "above average."

The 2.57-carat silver white diamond she extracted Friday was worth $2,500 when cut, a park official said.

BEVERLY HILLS, Calif. — Hollywood entertainers Friday joined Henry Kissinger at a party in a posh restaurant to honor Huang Chen, China's ranking diplomat in the United States.

Another diner at the Bistro was Jeb Magruder, a major figure in the Watergate scandal, but the managment said he was with another party.

Bob Hope, Danny Kaye, Rosalind Russell and Kirk Douglas were among the 50 luminaries invited by Kissinger to enjoy the fare of "French peasant" food. Chicken was the main course.

TOKYO — Butcher Yukio Yuzaki's face broke into a smile today, although he was able to recover only 70 per cent of about $1,700 worth of yen notes he had toasted to a crisp.

He placed a bundle of yen notes in his electric toaster because he thought it would be "the safest temporary cashbox" while he and his family went on a trip.

Airline's $75,000 To Nixon

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — The admission by American Airlines that it pumped $75,000 into President Nixon's re-election coffers looked certain today to spur similar confessions from other major companies.

The disclosure by the airline's chairman, George Spater, also looked as though it might generate demands for a closer check on who provided the millions of dollars that went into the Nixon campaign fund.

Some of the money was apparently used to pay for the burglary and bugging attempt at the Democratic party's Watergate headquarters here last year.

Spater—whose airline is the second-largest U.S. domestic carrier—said he was pressed by Nixon's former personal lawyer, Herbert Kalmbach, who said he expected $100,000.

Spater said the payments were made in five instalments between November, 1971, and March, last year. Only the last payment came from corporate sources, he said.

Under U.S. electoral law, it is illegal for corporations to make contributions to election campaign funds. But payments are often made in the name of individuals, who are then repaid by their employers.

Nixon's total campaign fund was believed to have reached about $60 million by election time last November. More than one-third of that was believed to have been donated before the tougher election laws went into effect in the preceding April.

Some reports said as much as $15 million might have been contributed by secret payments from big corporations.

The American Airlines disclosure was announced by special Watergate prosecutor Archibald Cox, whose mandate also includes a full-scale investigation of the $60 million handled by the Committee for the Re-election of the President.

Cox implied that American's confession could be a mitigating circumstance if the case goes to court.

In other developments:

—The New York Times, quoting a source close to the senate Watergate committee reported today that soon after Mary Jo Kopechne drowned in Sen. Edward Kennedy's car on Chappaquiddick Island July 18, 1969, an illegal wiretap was placed on the phone in the Georgetown house where she lived with three other girls.

—U.S. District Judge John Sirica Friday granted Gordon Strachan Limited immunity from prosecution and ordered him to testify before the senate Watergate committee. Strachan was liaison between deposed White House chief of staff H. R. Haldeman and the Nixon campaign committee.

—Sirica also reduced bond for conviction Watergate conspirator James McCord from $100,000 to $50,000. McCord had asked for a reduction to $30,000.

JOE E. BROWN DIES

New York Times

BRENTWOOD, Calif. — Joe E. Brown, the beloved elastic-mouth comedian, who despite adversities in his private life became the epitome of wholesome fun, died at his home here Friday.

At the 80-year-old comedian's bedside was his wife, Kathryn, to whom he had been married for 57 years. Brown was incapacitated by a stroke several years ago and also suffered from severe arthritis.

They referred to his mouth as the great open space (GOS), the Grand Canyon and the Mammoth Cave, and they said that he was the only man who could not cover his mouth when he yawned.

And the people thought it was funny. Almost from the start of his movie career, in 1928, until the 1940s, his pictures were among the 10 biggest box-office attractions.

Joseph Evan Brown was a staunch member of the slapstick school of humor. His early career as an acrobat in circuses taught him to fall safely.

He was forever the hapless soul — whether a soda jerk, a football player being thrown over the goal line for a last-minute touchdown, a bungling reporter, a country yokel making lemonade in a finger bowl or a rookie baseball player baffling his manager.

Martin Disputes Pearson 'Understood'

OTTAWA (UPI) — Former external affairs minister Paul Martin said Friday Canada had "no advance knowledge" in 1964 that the United States planned to bomb North Vietnam.

Previously unpublished portions of the Pentagon Papers, made public Friday, said former prime minister Lester Pearson, Martin and other Canadian officials were informed on May 28, 1964 — nine months before the bombing — that the United States might bomb North Vietnam.

Describing the May 28, meeting between Pearson and then-U.S. president Lyndon Johnson in New York City, one of the cables said the Canadian prime minister told Johnson he would "personally understand" if the United States were to bomb North Vietnam..

Asked if Canada was informed of the possibility of U.S. bombing against North Vietnam, Martin said, "We had no advance knowledge of any U.S. military plans."

"At no time did the United States consult us about its military plans in Vietnam. This is the first time I have heard this story about Mr. Pearson, and I do not believe that Mr. Pearson was ever told of the U.S. plans.

CURRENCY CRISIS TALKS

Times News Services

LONDON—The Bank of England's new governor, Gordon Richardson, today flew to Switzerland for crisis talks on the ailing pound and dollar with other central bank governors from the major Western nations.

"Although I don't think anything concrete will come from the meeting, I think urgent proposals of some kind will be announced," a chief dealer for bullion brokers Samuel Montagu said.

Among other rumors circulating today was that an emergency summit meeting of world finance ministers could come within the next few days.

The treasury and the Bank of England were being cagey today about what line Richardson will take at the talks, despite rampant rumors in London, including one that the foreign exchange market here will be closed on Monday.

Meanwhile, the New Zealand dollar will be revalued upward by three per cent Monday and its links with the United States dollar will be severed, Finance Minister Wallace Rowling said today in Wellington.

The move came after the U.S. dollar plunged to an all-time low Friday, throwing European foreign exchanges into chaos.

The pound sterling slumped along with the dollar and there were rumors that both currencies might be devalued.

Action Pledged On Feed Clamp

By VICTOR MACKIE
Times Ottawa Bureau

OTTAWA — Industry, Trade and Commerce Minister Alastair Gillespie, Friday voiced "real concern" in the Commons over the United States' government imposing export controls on a wide range of agricultural products.

"We have this matter under urgent, urgent review at the present time," Gillespie said.

"We will take the action the circumstances demand," he said.

Canadian farmers and consumers are bound to suffer from the impact of the latest measures announced by the U.S. administration, MPs warned.

Washington has placed export controls on 41 agricultural products, including edible oils, animal fats and livestock feed, in a move to halt the U.S. food price spiral and prevent shortages. The controls are effective immediately.

H. W. Danforth (PC—Kent-Essex), described the U.S. action as a "drastic but not unexpected move."

He pointed out that Canada is a major customer of the U.S. and this action could have "serious implications" for Canadian producers and consumers.

He asked Gillespie if the government in Canada is "assessing the results."

He also asked if the government had contingency plans to assure adequate supplies of food for Canadians.

It prompted a move by the Canadian government to impose export licensing controls on a number of agriculture products last Friday.

Canada imposed curbs on exports of soya beans and soya bean cake and meal, rape seed and rape seed cake and meal, flax seed, linseed cake and meal and fishmeal.

There is worry in Canada that the U.S. action will force up the prices of bacon, eggs, chicken, beef and other food products.

ONTARIO GAS PRICE HIKED

TORONTO (CP) — Imperial Oil Ltd. has increased the price of its gasoline across Ontario by one cent a gallon, raising the price of regular gas in Toronto to 59.9 cents.

President J. A. Armstrong said Friday the increase is the third by Imperial this year. In January it raised gasoline prices one cent and oil burner and diesel fuel two cents a gallon across Canada. In May it announced an increase of one cent a gallon in Ontario.

Last week BP Canada Ltd. also announced a one-cent rise in gasoline prices.

20 Face Drug Charges

NORTH VANCOUVER (CP) — New charges were laid Friday in provincial court here against 20 persons arrested a week ago in connection with an alleged attempt to import 1,000 pounds of hashish and marijuana into Canada.

The new charges followed the discovery Wednesday of 24 plastic bags containing about 800 pounds of hashish and 200 pounds of marijuana under a log on the beach of Quatsino Sound, five miles south of Winter Harbor on northwestern Vancouver Island.

Thirteen Americans, arrested on the converted U.S. minesweeper Marysville, were flown from Victoria to North Vancouver to face a charge of conspiracy to possess narcotics for the purpose of trafficking.

Five Canadians and two Americans arrested on the Canadian fishboat Gondola were also charged with the same offence. They also face a charge of conspiracy to import narcotics into Canada, laid in North Vancouver earlier in the week.

In addition, three members of the group of Americans were charged Friday with conspiracy to import narcotics into Canada.

Charged with conspiracy to possess narcotics for the purpose of trafficking are: Alexander Derenzy, 38, owner of the Marysville, San Rafael, Calif.; Carol Anne Maniscalo, 20, San Rafael; Diane Maniscalo, 17, San Francisco; Joellen Bal, 20, Napili, Maui, Hawaii;

Sandra Ann May, 23, Mill Valley, Calif.; Shelley Stevens, 19, San Rafael; Regina Saesi, 20, Daly City, Calif.; George S. McDonald, 49, San Rafael; Glen Elton Davis, 26, Maui, Hawaii;

Richard Joseph O'Brien, 48, San Francisco; George Roland Sonoda, 26, Hawaii; Richard William Burgess, 29, Chicago; and Frank Komarmy, 30, Forrest Knobs,

Japan: The Agony of Affluence

A maddening crush of commuters forces its way onto the Tokyo subway. This is the first of a six-part look at the Land of the Rising Sun by Times columnist Jack Scott.

They'd said it was the rainy season and they'd said to bring an umbrella, too, when they'd invited me to spend two weeks in this fevered, driven, prospering country. They were right on both counts.

Even for Tokyo, the greatest, most densely-populated, most hysterical city in the world, the Seibu department store is quite literally mad.

This is the time of O-chugen when, it seems, you buy a gift, usually imported, for everyone who's done you a favor in the past year or who may likely do you a favor in the year ahead. The bulk of the buying, traditionally, is in canned goods, imported booze (Johnnie Walker scotch is about $35 a bottle), soap, perfume or a necktie. There are more exotic presents if the obligation is considered a major one. Another department store, for example, offers a gift coupon worth about $90 which gives the recipient a free overnight visit and complete physical check-up in the private hospital of his choice.

It's best not to try to understand the Japanese, I am finding, but just to accept things the way they are because that's the way they are.

My young guide, Teiji Sukurai, valiantly leads the way through a wall of human flesh to the umbrella department. Teiji looks exactly like those war-time cartoons of the Japanese, all toothy grin and opaque, horn-rimmed spectacles, but each hour I am with him gives me a new appreciation of his intelligence and sensitivity. Only our humor is on differing wave lengths. Can I really be all that amusing?

The umbrella bought, Teiji tells me that the Seibu has a brand-new item that he's sure will interest me. We claw our way to the groaning escalators to the fifth floor.

The new item is a large sack made of white canvas called simply The Emergency Bag. It's most obvious use would be in case of another earthquake, predicted all but daily by the scientists who say that there's just no way that Tokyo can avoid a tremor of the dimensions that took 100,000 lives and left a million-and-a-half homeless in 1923.

It scared the hell out of one visitor, I don't mind admitting, but Tokyo went on without interrupting its frenzied pace last week when it trembled from a quake measuring five points on the Japanese scale of seven, the heaviest of the year, that hit the northern island of Hokkaido and caused a series of "minor tidal waves."

The current best-selling novel, by the way, now in its 74th printing and heading for the local sales record of "The Godfather," is a science fiction work by Sakyo Komatsu and is all about Japan sinking into the sea in the late 70s with two-and-a-half million drownings. They can't keep the book on the shelves.

The Emergency Bag contains about everything you'd want for such an eventuality. Flashlight. Map of Tokyo. Bag of sour-ball hard candy. Raincoat that folds into an envelope. Plastic water jug. Tablets for settling stomach disorders. Fill-in card for name, address, blood type, location of nearest possible shelter. Medicine kit with iodine, gauze, bandages, adhesive tape, scissors, a surgical probe.

As we fight our way down to the subway beneath the store — most Tokyo department stores are over the underground railway stations and many, in fact, are owned by the private companies that operate the lines — Teiji draws me to a window that looks on the street intersection below.

The sullen, sooty rain is still coming down. You could walk across the crush of pedestrians and cars, as you could at almost any Tokyo intersection. Above this surge of humanity and automobiles there is a flashing electric sign that alternately registers the minute-by-minute sound decibels and the air pollution. They are at major intersections throughout the monstrous city.

"It is to show when conditions are good or bad," Teiji explains. "They are always bad."

I don't understand the flashing figures.

"That is the sound pollution," Teiji explains. "Today it is appalling."

The lights change with a new figure.

"That is the photochemical, sulphuric acid and the carbon monoxide pollution," explains Teiji. "Today it is intolerable."

Now, after two weeks in Japan, I look back on that wet, comically chaotic morning when I bought the umbrella as perhaps the ideal, symbolic introduction to this remarkable nation, these 110 million people crowded into four small islands with about the same land area as Newfoundland.

In the decade ahead, perhaps sooner, this will be the richest single nation on the face of the earth. Yet today it's a nation in which appre-

Troops Hunt Kidnappers

SALISBURY — Rhodesian troops, led by big game hunters and African trackers, today pursued a band of guerrillas who kidnapped 292 students and staff members from a remote Roman Catholic mission school and still hold 40 of them.

"We are worried that as the missing party gets smaller it will be more difficult for those remaining to escape," said Father Egon Rojek, head of St. Albert's German Jesuit mission in northeastern Rhodesia.

A government spokesman said, however, he doubted that the African guerrillas would be able to reach the Mozambique border in a group with their hostages now that troops, trackers and hunters were in pursuit.

He said one guerrilla died in a skirmish with security forces but no further casualties have been reported.

The guerrillas, numbering 20 to 30, dressed in camouflage uniforms and toting submachine-guns, told German Jesuit priests running the mission that they came to liberate Rhodesia and were taking the children to China for guerrilla training.

The security men, lighting up the night sky with flares, have followed the guerrillas, now believed to have split into two groups, into the Zambesi Valley more than 12 miles from the hill-top mission.

Before leaving the mission, the guerrillas looted a store and took a large quantity of food and clothing which they force the children to carry, presumably to sustain them on the journey.

With the security forces at their heels there will be little time to rest, and added to this is Rhodesia's cruel winter weather — intense heat during the day and bitter cold at night.

Rojek said since the guerrilla raid on the mission 252 students and mission workers have been resuued by security forces or have managed to escape, he said.

He said 36 senior students, a primary school teacher, two kitchen maids and a local girl are still missing.

"Students who have returned say they were not fed by the guerrillas," he said. "Many of the children are weak from hunger after their forced march in the Zambesi Valley."

The Rev. Clement Freyer, a West German priest who voluntarily accompanied the guerrillas to ensure the safety of the hostages, returned today to the mission school. Rojek said Freyers had become separated from the group during one of the skirmishes.

Rescue Plans Snagged

SAIGON (CP) — A snag developed today in plans to bring about the rescue of two Canadians in Viet Cong hands for more than a week.

The Viet Cong's Provisional Revolutionary Government said in a statement that the first of three stages of a search operation under which the Canadians were expected to be returned no later than Monday had to be called off.

It could not say when flights would resume.

It blamed the South Vietnamese army.

Two helicopters took off earlier today bound for the divisional headquarters of the Viet Cong in the area of Xuan Loc, 35 miles northeast of Saigon, where the men disappeared a week last Thursday.

The helicopters were to make three trips. The first, today, to divisional headquarters, the second Sunday to another area and a third Monday to the Cam Tam area, about 10 miles west of the International Commission of Control and Supervision site from where the men left on a flag-showing trip.

But the PRG issued a statement tonight saying that the helicopters could not enter Viet Cong territory because of South Vietnamese operations "at the points scheduled for helicopters to land in order that PRG delegation officers could contact with local authorities in PRG-controlled territory."

PUC Commissioners Plan To Sue for Compensation

Two members of the B.C. Public Utilities Commission plan to sue the provincial government to get compensation for their forced retirement.

But first they must get a royal fiat — permission from the government to sue the government.

Lyle Wicks and Findlay S. McKinnon say the government has broken their 10-year contracts without offering them compensation or another job.

Their retirements have been forced by the dissolution of the PUC, which becomes official July 15.

Most functions of the PUC have been assumed by the new B.C. Energy Commission, created by legislation introduced in March by Attorney-General Alex Macdonald.

"The Crown has made no effort to meet with Mr. Wicks or Mr. McKinnon or with their duly authorized representatives for the purposes of coming to a fair and equitable settlement of their contractual rights;" Ian Stewart, lawyer for the two, said today in a prepared statement.

Stewart would not say how much the two will sue for, simply that "they each have seven and a half years to run on their contract."

Both signed 10-year contracts as commissioners in April 1971, with the contracts coming into effect April 15, 1971.

"Mr. Wicks and Mr. McKinnon took up their duties and since then have fully fulfilled and discharged their duties," said Stewart.

This week Stewart sent petitions of right to the provincial secretary asking that the lieutenant-governor (the cabinet, in effect) grant the fiat to allow them to sue.

Under B.C. law, no private citizen can sue the government without getting cabinet consent through a fiat.

Attorney-General Macdonald has said the government plans to abolish the fiat system.

The other member of the commission, Dr. J. F. K. English, who was chairman, is not part of the suit because he has retired, said Stewart.

NIXON SAYS NO

Times News Services

WASHINGTON — President Nixon told the Senate Watergate committee today he would not appear before it personally "under any circumstances" and would not permit it to see any of his presidential papers.

In a letter to Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Dem.-N.C., Nixon said: "I consider it my constitutional responsibility" to avoid an appearance before the panel or to make available presidential papers requested by the committee.

Referring to requests for documents made to White House counsel Leonard Garment by Ervin, Nixon wrote: "The pending requests ... would move us from proper presidential co-operation with a Senate committee to jeopardizing the fundamental constitutional role of the presidency."

Student Opinions Invited

Education commissioner John Bremer, assigned by Education Minister Eileen Dailly to undertake a comprehensive study of the B.C. school system, has invited students to submit their opinions on how education can be improved in the province.

Bremer, in a press release Friday, said students will be invited to form "study groups" in each of their schools "to conduct inquiries into any aspect of the educational process that they might consider to be of concern and to submit recommendations for change and improvement."

He said there are no specific terms of reference for students to follow. Areas of concentration could be local or province-wide, specific or general. Any work done would be part of the students' regular work load, perhaps incorporated into guidance courses.

Channels already exist for teachers to express their opinions, Bremer said. Student opinion should similarly be expressed "with honesty and candor and without fear."

He said a small budget may be available over normal school costs for the student efforts. If the program proves successful inter-school programs may be encouraged so that study groups can see their problems in perspective to others.

Bremer said the scheme has been approved in principle by the Principals' and Vice-Principals' Association.

Cycling is great transportation but traffic can be a problem

Victoria Times
SATURDAY, JULY 7, 1973 9
SECOND SECTION

Cyclists In Full Bloom

The bicycle boom is over, at least as far as sales are concerned, but it's going full tilt in city traffic and in the tourist industry.

Cycle shops report sales levelling off as the market reaches the saturation point. Streets and highways, however, are flooded with a healthy increase in two-wheelers as adults, youngsters and tourists have adopted the latest craze in transportation.

B.C. Ferries report a "terrific" increase in the number of tourists wheeling 10-speed cycles aboard or strapping them to the back of cars, vans and campers.

The ferry service reports that a fee schedule for bicycles hasn't yet been considered.

If statistics provided by Const. Ken Dibden of the Victoria police department are any indication, cyclists are becoming more safety conscious, especially when it comes to motor vehicles.

So far this year, there have been 14 collisions between bicycles and motor vehicles, down from 18 for the same period a year ago. The cyclists, it seems are waking up to the fact that they usually come out second best in such confrontations.

"If you're going to give any advice about the most important rule to follow," Dibden says, "tell cyclists to stick as close to the right hand side of the road as practical."

Pollen Wants B.C. to Stop Foreign Ownership of Land

Victoria Mayor Peter Pollen said Friday he will urge the provincial government to take steps to prevent all foreigners from owning land in British Columbia.

He said a large amount of speculating in land is done by German, Japanese and Hong Kong interests.

"This type of speculation does not do the community any good. British Columbia should follow the example of the Scandinavian countries where foreign ownership of land is not permitted," he said.

Pollen was commenting in an interview on a statement Thursday by Vancouver Mayor Art Phillips, who said there should be higher property taxes on foreign interests who own land in B.C.

The Vancouver mayor said property taxes on houses should be decreased while taxes were increased for landholdings — especially by foreign interests.

Phillips said the Greater Vancouver Regional District is looking for ways to discourage land speculation.

Pollen agreed that speculation had to be discouraged but said there was little a municipal government could do.

However, municipalities could urge the provincial government to take strong action against land speculation. He said he would urge the government to ban foreign ownership of land as an important first step.

He said there might be more efficient ways of dealing with speculation rather than by tying it to taxation as suggested by Phillips.

Pollen said foreign ownership of land is an important social question.

Meanwhile, raising the taxes on land while reducing them on improvements (houses) might interfere with municipal revenue.

This approach is not new as it is being used in Ontario and in some U.S. states, including Michigan, but perhaps the time had come to end the practice of financing municipal governments through property taxes, Pollen said.

The present system of financing municipal services through property taxes is making home ownership an unreasonable burden.

While federal and provincial governments had more than enough funds to meet their needs, municipalities were leading a hand-to-mouth existence because of their reliance on property taxation.

Victoria shared Vancouver's concern about speculation but land regulations were purely the prerogative of the provincial government.

However, Victoria would be urging the provincial government to take strong action, particularly on the foreign ownership question.

"Unless we act soon, we will be peasants in a rich man's world," Pollen said.

Voiceless Puppies Draw SPCA Protest

A proposed U.S. defence department experiment in which the voice boxes of 200 beagle puppies would be removed for gas experiments has drawn a protest from the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

William Leach, president of the Victoria branch of the SPCA, said Friday a telegram is being sent to the American Humane Society protesting a defence department statement that infers the experiment has SPCA backing.

A defence department spokesman said this week the experiment is "in keeping with the dog-use policies" of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals."

Leach explained that the American Humane Society is often referred to as the SPCA in the United States as it is modelled after the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Britain.

"I'm certain that humane societies in Canada and the United States are going to take an interest in this matter," he said.

The matter was first raised by U.S. congressman Les Aspin of Wisconsin, who wrote to the secretary of the U.S. Air Force strongly protesting the experiment, designed to test the effect of aviation pollutants, such as fuel, on the environment.

"Apart from going through these horrible experiments," said Leach, "the animals are usually poorly housed, and badly taken care of. A log may be subjected to the same experiment over and over again and kept alive in intolerable conditions."

In many research programs, Leach added, the voice boxes of animals are removed so they can't be heard when they are frightened or in pain.

David Beeching, secretary-manager of the Victoria SPCA, said there appears to be little need to use dogs for experimental purposes.

"I once heard a defence research official say there is less and less need to use animals for research purposes," he said.

School Board Buys Land

The Greater Victoria school board will buy three lots of land from the University of Victoria after getting permission from the provincial government Friday.

A cabinet order-in-council released Friday gives the university authorization to sell the three lots ot the school board for $53,200. Two of the lots, located on Argyle Street, have houses on them.

District superintendent Jack Longmore said Friday the two houses will be used to accommodate administration staff who now have offices in the Ewing Building. Staff making the move will include research and testing personnel, family life instructors, speech therapists and audio-visual employees.

Space vacated in the Ewing Building will be occupied by Camosun College personnel.

The Fuel They Called Black Diamonds

WHEN I WAS A BOY IN Nanaimo, the little pit ponies grazed away their retirement in a Protection Island meadow, but the blackfaced miners still worked their shifts in the labyrinths deep under.

They were good, tough men whose voices remembered England and Scotland and Wales. They washed the coal dust from their throats in Nanaimo's multitudinous beer parlors. They brought a quarter's worth of fish and chips home to their families for a bountiful Saturday night treat. The Big Strike was no more than an unhappy memory.

In Nanaimo and Ladysmith, Cumberland and Bevan, coal was king. The powder boss who was our next door neighbor celebrated restored prosperity by acquiring a T-Model shiny black as the coal chunks in his basement bin. If the winds of change were beginning to blow, only the pessimistic and the over-fearful paid heed.

The shift from coal to fuel oil wasn't dramatic nor did it come about overnight. But happen it did on sea and land, and it signalled the slow death of an industry. The last Vancouver Island coal mining I remember was a depression-inspired effort that brought a few dollars to a few men in the Lantzville area. By that time, the transition had been made to our present lumber-based economy.

An era doesn't vanish without trace. Though the mines are closed and the miners long gone, tokens remain.

Many of the tiny company-built houses that were home to generations of Island coal miners are still occupied. Some have been cleverly remodelled.

Others remain as they were when ships from every port loaded their bunkers with black djamonds, and when breaking big chunks into little ones for the home fires was a standard small-boy chore.

Washer Creek at Union Bay no longer runs black with coal dust, and bricks from the massive old cooking ovens have found their way into many a patio, planter and fireplace. But the slag heaps that rear their chunky pyramids within sight of the Island Highway are monuments to a time that has passed.

There are other reminders. Last week a friend showed me a collection of gear on which miners' lives and livelihoods once depended. Among the work-worn items were caps fitted with little whale oil lamps brought from the Old Country by the men who launched the Dunsmuir empire.

There were acetylene lamps of a later day — those I remember — and a draeger-man's backpack fitted with breathing apparatus for rescue missions in galleries turned lethal by fire, rockslip or the creeping black damp.

Another souvenir was a copy of a 1919 contract between Canadian Collieries (Dunsmuir) Limited and its employees of Ladysmith-Wellington district.

Under the terms of this contract, the company was to pay the miner a base rate of $4.20 a day. Firebosses drew $4.99, timbermen and tracklayers $4.20. The highly-paid machinist rated a top of $5.44, a boy on the picking table might aspire to $1.75 for his day's work, and a mainline locomotive engineer got 52½ cents a hour.

All classifications under the contract received a per-day cost of living bonus of $1.45¼, and each married employee or single hand who supported his parents could purchase company coal once a month at $4.40 per ton. The miner paid the company 25c monthly for tool-sharpening. Axes weren't included. A miner was expected to set axe to grindstone himself.

An employee absent without permission for two or more consecutive working days in any month was liable to dismissal without notice. It was mutally agreed that "the operation of any mine shall not be suspended in event of a fatal accident occuring in such mine nor during the day of the funeral of any employee."

The union man of today would not be impressed by that contract. Still, it represented security and something mightily like prosperity to the men who accepted it.

Will coal make a comeback on Vancouver Island? I've listened while optimistic old-timers pointed to the energy crisis and to coal exports from B.C. interior fields. Sooner or later, these insist, we'll have working coal mines again.

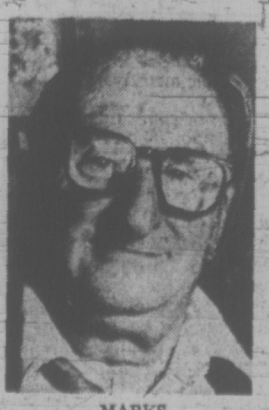
Festival Postponed

The threat of rainy weather has caused a one-week postponement of Saanich's annual Strawberry Festival, originally scheduled for Sunday at Beaver Lake Park.

Included in the festival July 15 will be events honoring Ald. Les Passmore's 33 years of service to the municipality.

ROAD BLOCK FAILS TO CATCH A THIEF



MARKS

A thief with $200 in a brown paper bag averted police roadblocks in Saanich Friday night and made a clean getaway.

Harry Marks, the manager of the Elk Lake Market, 5450 Pat Bay Highway, was alone in the store at 8:30 p.m. Friday when a young man walked in and demanded all the money in the till.

"He wanted the money put in a brown paper bag so I did what he wanted and then he left," Marks said.

Marks said it was the first time the small store had been robbed.
